PREFACE

IN the year 1898 the Asiatic Society of Bengal completed the publication, under my editorship, of a Kāshmirī Grammar written in Sanskrit by Īśvara Kaula, and entitled the Kāshmirāśabdāmṛta. During the preparation of that work for the Press my attention was drawn to a report that its author had also composed a Kāshmirī-Sanskrit Kōṣa, or Dictionary. Further inquiries elicited the fact that this was really the case, and after prolonged negotiations, for the success of which I was largely indebted to the efforts of Sir Aurel Stein, K.C.I.E., and to the friendly influence exercised by Sir Adelbert Talbot, K.C.I.E., then Resident at Śrīnagar, the manuscript came into my possession at the end of that year.

Examination of the papers showed that Īśvara Kaula never lived to complete, much less to revise, his Kōṣa.¹ For the first few letters of the alphabet he had, it is true, written out a fair copy, each entry consisting of a Kāshmirī word together with a synonym in Sanskrit and another in Hindī, but the greater part of the manuscript, as it reached my hands, consisted merely of memoranda—lists of Kāshmirī words with no translation at all, and even these not covering the whole alphabet.

Incomplete as they were, these papers nevertheless formed a valuable addition to the literature of an important and little-known language, and it seemed to me that it was well worth while making an effort to utilize them and to publish the results. Accordingly, in the year 1899, I represented the state of affairs to the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and suggested what seemed to me a practical method for making the materials available to scholars. That Society, with great liberality, provided the funds necessary for the scheme, which was to employ a competent Kāshmirī Paṇḍit to fill up the lacunæ left by Īśvara Kaula, and to prepare the manuscript for the Press.

Sir Aurel Stein added one more to the many debts that I owe to his kindness by securing for me the services of Paṇḍit Gōvinda Kaula, of Śrīnagar, who at once commenced the preparation of the necessary slips. To my great regret that excellent scholar died in June, 1899, before he had finished the words commencing with the letter क, and some delay necessarily occurred before I could find his successor, Paṇḍit (afterwards Mahāmahōpādhyāya) Mukunda Rāma Śāstrī, also of Śrīnagar, of whose accuracy and learning I had had previous experience while editing the Kāshmirāśabdāmṛta. He took up the work again from the beginning, and continued to be my assistant until his regretted death in 1921, not only copying out and correcting what Īśvara Kaula had left, but largely adding to the number of words explained.

As the authority of this Dictionary mainly depends on the fact that the greater portion has been prepared by these Kāshmirī Paṇḍits, it will be well to explain the procedure followed by them. Even the fullest portions of Īśvara Kaula's materials left much to be desired. A bare list of Kāshmirī words, with, in each case, a single synonym in Sanskrit and another in Hindī, was of little use. Under my instructions and supervision, each word was now written on a separate slip, with, in the case of nouns, information as to its gender. To this was added its synonym in Sanskrit, and, as a further check, in Hindī. The Paṇḍit then added a short explanation in Sanskrit giving further details as to the meaning of the word. To take an example—For the word āb-dāb, all that the original materials gave was as follows : आब-डाब । अपथ्यः । बट्पहेड़ी ।

As prepared by the Paṇḍit, the slip for this word has taken the following form :—

प	(1) आब-डाब
(2) अपथ्यसेवनम्	(3) बट्पहेड़ी
(4) रोगितावस्थायां यदपथ्यसेवनं चेन पुनरपि रोगाधिक्यं जायते तादृशमपथ्यसेवनमिदम् ।

¹ He died in the year A.D. 1893.

I have numbered the entries in the slip for convenience of reference. In (1) the letter प indicates that the word is masculine. The rest of the entry and the whole of (2) and (3) belong more or less to the original materials, and (4) was added by the Paṇḍit. From this I prepared the article in the Dictionary. I inserted the transliteration in (1), retained the Sanskrit synonym in (2), abandoned, as surplusage, the Hindi synonym in (3), and translated the substance of (2) and (4) into English. The article thus took the following form :—

āb-dāb, अब-डॉब. अपचयेदन्नम् m. giving unwholesome food or drugs to an invalid.

To the entries thus prepared by the Paṇḍits I have added numerous words and meanings collected by myself in the course of my reading. As my authority on the subject is small, I always give in each case a reference to the source from which the word or meaning was obtained. Articles that depend entirely on my own authority can be distinguished from those based on the Paṇḍits' slips by the fact that the latter, and the latter only, have a Sanskrit synonym following the Kāshmiri word.

The principal sources other than the Paṇḍits' slips have been indexes of words occurring in all the Kāshmiri texts that are known to me. Amongst them are : (1) the Lallā-vākyāni, a collection of songs by the celebrated Lāl Dēd (L.V., quoted by verse-number) edited by Dr. L. Barnett and myself for the Royal Asiatic Society, and the following edited by myself alone : (2) Kṛṣṇa Rāzdān's Siva-pariṇaya (Siv., similarly quoted), (3) Divākara Prakāśa Bhaṭṭa's Śrīrāmāvatāra-carita (Rām., Biblotheca Indica, and (5) Hātim's Songs and Tales, a valuable collection of folk-tales, etc., in village paragraph, London, 1923). One other text was (6) Burkhard's edition of Maḥmūd Gāmī's Yūsuf (YZ., quoted by verse-number), an excellent example of Kāshmiri poetry as written by Musalmāns. To these should be added (7) Dr. Hinton Knowles' Dictionary of Kashmiri Proverbs and Sayings (K.Pr., quoted by page), (8) Mr. Wade's Kāshmiri Grammar (W., quoted by page), (9) my edition of Īśvara Kaula's Kāsmīraśabdāmṛta (I.K., quoted by sūtra), published by the Asiatic Society of Bengal, (10) my own Essays on Kāshmiri Grammar (Gr.Gr., quoted by page), and (11) Sir Walter Elmslie's Vocabulary of the Kashmiri Language (El.), and in the Vocabulary appended to my own Kāshmiri Manual (Gr.M.) published by the Clarendon Press in 1912.

Of the above, Nos. (1) to (5) were, when I began writing the Dictionary, available only in manuscripts carefully prepared under my instruction. Since then they have all been printed, and precautions have been taken to secure that the texts of the manuscripts and of the printed editions should agree in every particular. I hope that I have included in the Dictionary every Kāshmiri word occurring in these. In the earlier pages I did not give references to every occurrence in each of them, contenting myself with quoting what I considered to be typical instances; but, as the work progressed, I found it advisable to be more liberal in my references, and, save in the case of the most common words, I have quoted practically every occurrence. I may here note that there appeared in Kashmir in 1913 an edition of the Śrīrāmāvatāra-carita (No. (3) above) printed in the Persian character. In order to facilitate reference to it, I give below on pp. xvii ff. a Concordance to it and to my edition in the Bibliotheca Indica.

Kāshmiri, especially as spoken by Musalmāns, borrows freely from Persian, and (through Persian) from Arabic. In works written by Musalmāns, such as the Yūsuf Zulaikhā above mentioned, there are whole passages of which the vocabulary is really more Persian than Kāshmiri, strings of nouns and adjectives taken from the former language being merely held together by some verb belonging to the latter. In fact, such Kāshmiri is an exact counterpart of the high literary Urdū fashionable a generation ago in Lucknow. To have included all such Persian words in this Dictionary would have uselessly increased the bulk of the work, and have given little help to the student. Such words will be found in any good Hindōstāni Dictionary, and it is not probable that any person will study Kāshmiri who has not a certain acquaintance either with that language or with Persian. I have therefore endeavoured to admit to the pages of this Dictionary only such Persian words as are in general use by all classes, and I have been strict even in regard to them. I have included all Persian words registered by my Paṇḍits, and also all those to be found in the Proverbs contained in Dr. Hinton Knowles' book, as well as in the vocabularies already mentioned, and I believe that this will be found to give a very fair selection. On the other hand, there are no doubt hundreds of Persian and Arabic words in such poems as the Yūsuf Zulaikhā, which will not be found in the following pages.

Kāshmiris use three alphabets for writing their language. Hindūs as a rule employ either the Śāradā or the Nāgarī character, and Musalmāns the Persian. The spelling of Kāshmirī words written in the Persian character has the advantage of being fairly constant, but the alphabet is quite unsuited for illustrating the complicated vowel sounds of the language. I have therefore decided not to use it except in the case of words borrowed from Persian. Even such words, when forming part of the Hindū vocabulary, and evidenced as such by being included in the Paṇḍits' slips, are also written in Nāgarī. As for the Śāradā character, no types are available, nor, as a rule, are European students familiar with it, and I have therefore written all words not purely Musalmān in Nāgarī. But in this case another difficulty has arisen. No two Hindūs spell Kāshmirī alike in that form of script. Every man is a law unto himself. I have in my possession two Nāgarī manuscripts of the same work—the Śiva Parīṇaya; and as an example of the various modes of spelling I here give the same passage transcribed from each.

MS. A. इन्द्राक्षस अलि खतु अन्धकारो । ज्ञोरन्ति गोस बुरपारयो ॥

MS. B. इन्द्राक्षस हलि खतु अन्धकार । ज्ञोरन्ति गुस बोरपारयु ॥

MS. A. स्वकवाक् वन कुख् इह वख्चनहारो । महानपत ध्यान दारयो ॥

MS. B. मुक्ताक् तन जोख् धूह् भव्चनहार । महानपत ध्यान दारयु ॥

Now a dictionary must follow one system of spelling throughout, and I have, accordingly, in the present work followed, with one or two slight alterations, that of Īśvara Kaula, the best and most logical of all those used for Kāshmirī. But it is obvious that, however excellent its system of spelling may be, a dictionary that follows the conventional order of the Nāgarī alphabet will be of little use to the student of works that diverge so widely from the standard as does MS. B. Twelve out of the fifteen words given in the extract would not be found in their proper places, and would have to be searched for under another orthography. It will be observed from a comparison of the two extracts that most of the variations occur in the representation of vowel sounds. Consonantal variations are few, and can easily be made subject to one or two general rules. This is true of all systems. After much consideration and many experiments, I therefore decided, as the most practical course, to make the romanized transliteration the basis of the alphabetical order, and to arrange the words in the approximate order of the English consonants, without any regard to the vowels. Thus, whether a word is spelt kōm^a, kom, kāmu, kūm^a, or kāmi, it will occupy the same place in the Dictionary, its place being determined by the k and the m and by nothing else. Only in those cases in which several words have all the same consonants, and differ only in their vocalization, will the order of the vowels be taken into account. As regards words beginning with vowels, these are all grouped together at the beginning, the order in the group being determined by the consonants. Then will follow all words beginning with b, then those beginning with c, and so on. In order to serve as a check against misprints, after every Kāshmirī word in the roman character, I have given it again either in the Nāgarī character, according to the spelling of Īśvara Kaula, or, in the case of words directly borrowed from Persian, in the Persian character. This is usually followed by its Sanskrit translation and then by its meaning in English.

The following is the order of the vowels when appearing in different words of which the consonantal skeleton is the same:—^a, ^ā, a, ā, ^ā, ā; ai; au; ^ē, ^ē, ^ē, ^ē, ^ē; ⁱ, i, ī; ^ō, ^ō, ^ō, ^ō, o, ō, ô, ö; ^u, u, ū, ^ū, ^ū.¹ Anunāsika is represented by ~, and does not affect the order of words. Anusvāra is represented by m or n according to pronunciation. The Sanskrit vowels ru (ॠ) and rē (ॡ) (modified ॠ) are arranged (in the forms, respectively, of ru and rē) among consonants under r, with which, in writing, they are quite commonly confounded.

The following is the order of the consonants:—b, c (ch), d and ḍ, f, g, h, j, k (kh), l, m, n, ñ, p (ph), r, s (sh), t (th) and ṭ (ṭh), ṣ (ṣh), v (or w), y, z. But the following points must be noted. The aspirates ch, kh, ph, th, and ṭh, and also the sibilant sh, appear in their English alphabetical order. Thus ch comes between cg and cj, and sh between sg and sj (vowels being neglected as usual). I would draw especial attention to this, as I find that some who have consulted the Dictionary have been misled by failing to remember that, in the case of ch, kh, ph, sh, th, ṭh, and ṣh, for the purposes of English alphabetical sequence, these respective groups have each been dissolved into its component typographical parts, and are not to be considered as so many single letters, as in the Nāgarī ॠ, ॡ, ॢ, ॣ, ।, ॥, and ० respectively.

¹ It will be observed that these are separated into groups, each separated by a semicolon. I must confess that, when the consonantal framework of a number of words has been the same, I have not always exactly followed the order of the vowels within each group, being sometimes led to disregard that by practical questions of convenience of reference. This will not, I hope, give rise to any serious misapprehension.

The nasalization indicated in the Nāgarī character by anunāsika (ँ) is represented in the roman character by the sign ~ over the nasalized vowel. Thus औँ ā, and so on. This does not affect the alphabetical order. Anusvāra (ं) is represented by m or n according to its sound. In Kāshmīrī words it occurs only as a compendium scriptura for a nasal before a consonant of the same class. Thus, खँ for खण्ड khṇḍ.

As regards consonants generally, the virāma has been omitted in the second column to avoid typographical complications. Kāshmirī has no aspirated sonants (gh, jh, ḍh, dh, or bh). The only consonants that it possesses which are strange to the Nāgarī alphabet are the affricatives, च tsa, छ tsha, and ज़ za. Their corresponding nasal is न na; thus, च ntsa, छ ntsha, and ज़ nza; but when, according to the laws of phonetic mutation, dentals are changed to affricatives, the dental न na is changed to the palatal ञ ñe, which some native scribes then write as ज़. The Sanskrit vowel ऋ r occurs only in words written by pandits, and directly borrowed by them from that language. In Kāshmirī it always becomes ru or (when epenthetically modified) rē. Hence, in this dictionary, it is, for purposes of alphabetical sequence, treated as identical with ru, rē, under the consonant r. The Arabic 'ain' (ع) is always dropped in words borrowed by Kāshmirī, though retained in writing when the Persian character is employed, as in عُذر above.

Nouns substantive are quoted in the nom. sg., or, when only used in the plural, in the nom. pl.

Adjectives are quoted in nom. sg. masc.

Pronouns are quoted in the nom. sg. Those pronouns which distinguish between animate and inanimate forms are quoted in the nom. sg. inan. Thus, suḥ सुह will be found under the inanimate form tih तिह. Cross-references are given in such cases.

Verbs whose roots end in consonants are quoted in the infinitive in un. The few verbs whose roots end in vowels are quoted in the infinitive in nu.

They are as follows: khyonu ख्यनु, to eat; cyonu च्यनु, to drink; hyonu ह्यनु, to take; pyonu प्यनु, to fall; zyonu ज्यनु, to be born; dyonu द्यनु, to give; nyonu न्यनु, to take; and yunu यनु, to come.

The verb substantive is quoted under chuh चुह, the pres. masc. sg. 3.

CONCORDANCE TO THE TWO VERSIONS OF THE

ŚRĪ-RĀMĀVATĀRA-CARITA

So far as I can ascertain, no complete manuscript copy of the Śrī-Rāmāvatāra-carita of Divākara Prakāśa Bhaṭṭa exists in Kashmīr. My edition, published in the Bibliotheca Indica, is a compilation of different sections, gathered together in manuscript from various quarters. While this dictionary was in course of publication, another edition of the poem, collected in the same way, was printed in the Persian character at the Kashmīr Pratāb Steam Press in Śrīnagar (1913). It naturally differs considerably in the order of the verses, and to a certain extent in the order of the subject matter, from my text which is that to which reference is made in this dictionary. On the other hand, making due allowance for this, the wording closely agrees in the two versions. For convenience of reference, I here give a concordance, showing the page and line of the Śrīnagar edition that correspond to each verse in that of the Bibliotheca Indica.

ADDITIONAL ABBREVIATIONS.

H. = Hätim's Tales, collected by Sir Aurel Stein and edited and translated by Sir George Grierson (London, 1923).

I.K. = Kāsmīra-śabdāmṛta of Īśvara Kaula, edited by Sir George Grierson (Calcutta, 1898).

K. = Śrī-Kṛṣṇāvatāra-carita or Śrī-Kṛṣṇāvatāra-līlā of Prakāśa-Rāma Bhaṭṭa (MS.). The author's poetical name was Dina-nātha. This work is wrongly attributed to Paramānanda in the Preliminary Note.

Ksh. = Kāshmiri.

L.V. = Lallā-Vākyāni, edited by Sir George Grierson and Dr. L. Barnett (London, 1920).

Rām. = Śrī-Rāmāvatāra-carita of Divākara-Prakāśa Bhaṭṭa (MS.).

Rām. P. = Printed edition of the above. See Concordance.

A DICTIONARY KASHMIRI AND ENGLISH

WORDS COMMENCING WITH VOWELS

^a. This vowel (a-mātrā), which also occurs in P'shtō and other languages of the North-West Frontier, is pronounced as an extremely short a. It never begins a word. In the Nāgarī and Śūradā characters it is not represented at all, the consonants between which it occurs being compounded into one character. Thus, the word ṭh, thou, is written ṭh, literatim ṭ-h, as if with no vowel. In the printed text of the Kāśmīra-śabdāmṛta it is represented by virāma, thus ṭh. In the Persian character it is represented by zabar, thus ṭh.

This vowel occurs under two sets of circumstances. In the first it is an original vowel, inherent in the word in which it occurs, and in such cases it modifies the vowel of the preceding syllable, if any, and if that vowel is liable to modification. Thus, a followed by ^a becomes ā, ā becomes ō, ē becomes ī, ō becomes ū, and so on. Examples will be found under the respective vowels. In the second set of circumstances ^a is not original, but is merely a helping vowel inserted between the members of an original compound consonant to make the pronunciation more easy (what Sanskrit grammarians call śvarabhakti). In such a case a preceding vowel is not modified. Thus the Sanskrit word शस्त्र śastra, iron, becomes in Kāśmīrī शस्त्र, shēst^ar, and the Arabic word جالد, jald, active, becomes जल्द jald, or जल्द jal^ad, quickly. As in the latter case, the insertion of this ^a is often optional and depends upon the personal equation of the speaker.

Every final a in the language is pronounced very shortly, as if it were ^a, but this distinction is not marked in writing, nor is the preceding vowel affected by it.

ⁱ. This vowel bears the same relation to ^a that ā does to a (see ā). When ^a is followed by ⁱ it becomes ī. Like the ^a it is omitted in the Nāgarī character. In the Persian character it is represented by zabar. Thus, from अंदर, and^ara, from inside, we have a 1. This is the usual short a of Hindī and other Indian languages, sounded like the a in 'America'. It is represented by अ in Nāgarī, and by zabar in the Persian character. When followed by ^a it becomes ā, when followed by ⁱ it becomes ī, when followed by ^u it becomes ū, and when followed by ^ā it becomes ū.

When ya is initial or follows a vowel it becomes yē, and when it immediately follows another consonant it becomes ē, and so also does a when it follows ñ or sh. Thus, यमिस yēmis, not yamis, बिय biyē, not biya, while पोथ्य pōthya, books, becomes pōthē, म्यात्र myāṇa, mine (fem. plur.), becomes myāṇē, and निश nisha, near, becomes nishē. Similarly, also sometimes after c, ch, and j, as explained under the article ē.

Similarly, when wa immediately follows another consonant it becomes ō. Thus, दवाद, milk, becomes dōd.

The vowel a at the end of a word is always pronounced as ^a; but, the rule being universal, it is not customary to indicate the fact in writing.

In monosyllabic words ending in an aspirated consonant a has the sound of the a in 'hat', as in krakh, a noise.

a 2. An interjectional suffix used by a woman when addressing a man or woman who is a familiar or a junior. Thus, hatabā kāk-a, O father (familiarly), hatau Gana (for Gana + a), O Gana. When a woman addresses a man or a woman by his or her proper name we may use -a bāyē or -a bāyau. Thus, hatabā Mahādēv-a bāyē, hatabā Mahādēv-a bayau, or hatau Mahādēv-a bāyau, O Mahādēv. This cannot be used with words which are not proper names. We cannot say hatabā kāk-a bāyē, O father.

a 3, ā 1, ay. Three forms of a suffix added to verbs, after the pronominal suffixes, if any, and giving an interrogative force. Before them the kh of a pronominal suffix does not become h, as it does before another pronominal suffix, but a final h is dropped, i, i, or ē becomes y, and a final u (but not u or ū) becomes w, even when originally followed by such a dropped h. Thus, sapadi + ā becomes sapadyā, will he become? sapād + ā becomes sapadyā, did they (masc.) become? bōvē + ā becomes bōvyā, did they (fem.) become? chēh + ā becomes chyā, is she? and chuh + ā becomes chwā, is he?; but kor + ā becomes korā, pronounced korā, was he made? and kūr + ā becomes kūrā, pronounced kūrā, was she made? After a final a the termination and the suffix (with the exception noted below) together become ā; thus, kara + a becomes karā, shall I make?

The rules for the use of these suffixes are somewhat complicated and are not always strictly followed. The following is the most usual custom:—

In the first person, or when immediately following a suffix of the first person, a is employed with the singular and ā with the plural. Thus, chus-a, am I (masc.)? chēs-a, am I (fem.)? chu-m-a, is there to me? chyā (chih + ā or chēh + ā), are we (masc. and fem.)?

In the second person singular and plural, or when immediately following a pronominal suffix of the second person, the usual form employed is a. Thus, chukh-a, art thou (masc.)? chēkh-a, art thou (fem.)? chu-y-a (pronounced chuyē, see ē), is there to thee? In the plural, contrary to the rule just stated about final a, the final a of the termination is elided, so that we have chiw-a for chiwa + a, are you (masc.)? chēw-a, are you (fem.)? The suffix ā can also be used with the second person, but is not polite.

In the third person ā is alone employed. Thus, chwā (chuh + ā), is he? chyā (chēh + ā), is she? or (chih + ā), are they (masc.)? or (chēh + ā), are they (fem.)? Occasionally we find a used with the feminine, as in sapūzā, did she become?

In the feminine it is usual to substitute ay (or, after a vowel, y) for a or ā if a woman is addressed. Thus, karān chēs-ay, am I making? (a woman is addressing a woman). If she were addressing a man she would say karān chēs-a. Similarly, karān chy-ēy (for karān chēh + ay), do we make? if a woman is addressing a woman, but karān chy-ā if a man is addressed. In the second person a may be substituted for ay, so that we have karān chēkh-ay, or karān chēkh-a, art thou making? (in which either a man or a woman is addressing a woman).

Similarly, in the second person plural we have karān chēw-a-y or karān chēw-a, are you (fem.) making? For the third person we have karān chy-ēy (karān chēh + ay), is she making, or are they (fem.) making? (a man or a woman is addressing a woman).

Similar negative interrogatives are nā and nay.

- a. The peculiar Kāshmiri modified a, represented in the Nāgarī character by अ and in the Persian character by zabar. Thus, अदरुन, أدرن, ad^arun, to be moist. The sound of this letter, which is not uncommon, has nothing corresponding to it in English. It is something between the ordinary a and the ō in 'hot', but is exactly equivalent to neither.

This a usually arises from the influence of a following a. Thus, chuh kalān, he is dumb, but chuh kal^arāwān, he makes dumb.

- ā. This letter represents the sound which a takes when it is followed by i. It is represented in the Nāgarī character by इ, and in the Persian character by zabar. Thus, असि, أس, āsⁱ, we. The sound of this letter is that of a short ai. Thus āsⁱ sounds something like aⁱsⁱ.

ā 2; for ā 1 see a 3. This is the ordinary ā of other Indian languages, and has the sound of a in 'father'. It is represented in Nāgarī by आ and in the Persian character by alif. Thus, काठ, كاث, kāth, wood. This is a very unstable letter. When followed by i or ī it often becomes ō, and when followed by u it often becomes ô. Thus, mālis, to a father, becomes mōlis; the Arabic qā'im becomes kōim, established; tayārī becomes tayōrī, readiness, and thākur becomes thōkur, an idol. Before the mātrā-vowels similar changes occur. Thus, before a, i, o, or ū it becomes ō, as in kōn^arāwān, to make one-eyed (from kānun, to have one eye); mōli (base māl-), fathers; abōger^a, not divided (from bāg, division); brōr^a (base brār-), a cat; and before u it becomes ô, as in myōn^a (base myān-), my. Sometimes the ā becomes ō, even when no i or u follows, as in pōnts, five; ōs, a face.

ai 1. This is the ai of Hindī, pronounced like the y in 'my'. At the end of a word it is often written ay, as in rōpai or rōpay, a rupee. It is represented in Nāgarī by ऐ, and in Persian by zabar or zēr followed by ye. Thus, ऐठ, أيت or ایت, aith, eight. When not final, ai is often optionally pronounced as ō, as in aith or ōth, eight. Before i or ū, ai becomes ū. Thus, from the base kait, how many? we have pl. dir. masc. kūti, sing. dir. fem. kūts^ū. Before u it becomes ū, as in sing. dir. masc. kūt^ū.

ai 2. ऐ, conj. if. See ay.

ai 3. ऐ, interj. O! W. 101. ai Khudāyē or ai Khudāyō, O God! ib.; ai hākh, O cabbage! K.Pr. 4. au is properly pronounced as in Hindī, but is usually hardly distinguishable from, and is freely interchangeable with, ō. Thus, कयौन or कयौन, کریون, karyōn or karyaun, he did. Before mātṛā-vowels it is treated exactly like ō.

ē. This mātṛā-vowel bears the same relation to a that ē does to a. That is to say, when a follows ñ it becomes ē. Thus, बन्नावुन, بنیراون or بنیراون, bañrāwun, to cause to be. It is pronounced as a very short e, like the second e in 'ceremony'.

ē. When ya follows a consonant, or when a follows ñ or sh, it becomes ē, which is represented by य or च in Nāgarī and by zēr in the Persian character. Thus, वय, وے, vēth, the River Jehlam; स्याच, میانه, myāñē, my (fem. plur.); बच, بے, bēñē, a sister. This letter is commonly pronounced like the e in 'met', but some Kāshmiris, especially Hindūs, put a slight y-sound in front of it, as if we said 'm'et'. Before i, ē is unchanged in pronunciation, but is written in the Nāgarī character as modified. Thus, बड़ि tēthi, bitter (pl. masc.). Before u it becomes yo, as in बड़ु tyothu, bitter (sing. masc.). Before ū it becomes modified to ē (see below), as in बड़ु tēthū, bitter (sing. fem.), pronounced almost t'ūth. Before a it becomes ē (see below).

When ē (i.e. ya) follows t, th, or z, the y is generally dropped, and ē becomes a. Thus dit + ya is not ditē, but dita. The same also often occurs after s. The rules for this will be found in the grammars, under the head of the conjugation of verbs.

In the foregoing cases we actually find a used where we should expect ē after t, th, or z. We have seen that after ñ an a is pronounced as ē. This is because the sound of y is inherent in ñ, which is pronounced as ny. The letter ña is therefore naturally pronounced as nyē. This change is universal. Kāshmiris also maintain that the sound of y is inherent in the four letters c, ch, j, and sh. In other words, they say that c is the same as cy, ch as chy, j as jy, and sh as shy, and they write them indifferently च, च; छ, छ; ज, ज; and श, श respectively. It thus follows that when ē follows any one of these three letters the y of the ya is usually, but not necessarily, omitted, so that cē is written च cya or च ca; chē is written छ चya or छ cha; jē, ज जya or ज ja; and shē, श shē or श sha. In other words, both च and च are pronounced as cē, and so on for the others. In the case of श, as in the case of च, the pronunciation of a as ē is universal, and hence, in this dictionary, श is always transliterated shē, not sha. Here, in contrast to the foregoing, we have a change of spelling, but no change of sound.

Moreover, owing to the constant confusion between i and ē, ci is often written च (i.e. ca for cē) or च cē, and, conversely, we even find च ci written instead of च ca or च cē. Similarly, the postposition nisha (or, better, nishē) निश, from, is often written in the Roman character nishi, and its real sound is nearer nishē than anything else. So on, for the others.

We have seen that ya only becomes ē when it follows a consonant in the same word. When ya is initial or follows a vowel it is pronounced yē, and will be so transliterated. Thus, यमिस्, ییس, yēmis (not yamis), to whom; बिय, بیہ, biyē, also.

The letter ē is quite often interchanged with i, both in speaking and in writing. Most Kāshmiris seem to be unable to distinguish between the two sounds.

ē. This vowel bears the same relation to ē that a bears to a. That is to say, ē becomes ē in cases in which a would become a. Its pronunciation is hardly affected. It is represented in Nāgarī by putting the mark ' over the corresponding sign for ē, and in the Persian character by zēr. Thus, from the बड़ुन, بڑن, vēthun, to be fat, we get बड़ुन, بڑن, vētharun, to make fat, in which the ē has been modified to ē owing to the influence of the following a-mātṛā.

ē. This is the modified form of ē before ū. It has a sound lying between i and ū, with a slight y-sound preceding, as in tēthū, above, under ē.

ē. This is the long ē of Hindī, pronounced like the a in 'mate'. It is represented by ए in Nāgarī, and by yē in the Persian character. Thus, मेल, میل, mēl, unite. This sound cannot commence a word. In such a position ē always becomes yē. Thus, ēr, wool, becomes yēr. In the Nāgarī character an initial ē is optionally written, thus ए or ऐ, but the word is always pronounced yēr, and will be so written in this dictionary. The Persian character has always یر.

When ē is followed by a, i, or ū it becomes ī. Thus, from tēzun, to be sharp, we have tizārāwun, to make sharp; from the base khēt- we have khētī, a field (pl. nom. khētē); and from the base sēr- we have sīrū, a brick (pl. nom. sērē). When ē is followed by u it becomes yū. Thus, from phērun, to revolve, we have for the past participle, masc. sing. phyūr, plur. phīr; fem. sing. phīr, plur. phērē.

The letter ē is quite often interchanged with ī, both in speaking and in writing. Most Kāshmiris seem to be unable to distinguish between the two sounds.

i. This is the i-mātrā of the Kāshmiri alphabet. It has the sound of a very slightly pronounced i, and it also affects the pronunciation of the vowels of the preceding syllable, as explained under the head of each vowel. It is represented in Nāgarī by ॢ, and in the Persian character by zēr. Thus, म्याँ, میان, myōnⁱ, my (masc. pl.).

i. This is the ordinary i of Hindī, pronounced like the i in 'pin'. It is represented in the Nāgarī character by ॣ and in the Persian by zēr. Thus, निश, نیشہ, nishē, near. When followed by ^a, ⁱ, or ^ū it is not perceptibly changed, but before ^u it becomes yu. Thus kit^a becomes kyut^a. In the Nāgarī character we meet both कितु and क्युतु, but the pronunciation is always that of the latter, and that spelling will be followed in this dictionary.

The sound of i cannot commence a word. In such a position i always becomes yi. Thus, ih, this, becomes yih. In the Nāgarī character it is optionally written इह or यिह, but the word is always pronounced yih, and will be so written in this dictionary. The Persian character always has یہ.

The letter i is quite often interchanged with ē, both in speaking and in writing. Most Kāshmiris seem to be unable to distinguish between the two sounds.

i. This is the ordinary long i of Hindī, pronounced like the i in 'pique'. It is represented in the Nāgarī character by । and in the Persian by yē preceded by zēr. Thus, शीन, شین, shīn, snow. When followed by ^a, ⁱ, or ^ū it is not changed, but before ^u it becomes yū. Thus, from the base nīl- we have nyūl^a, blue. This sometimes occurs before an ordinary u; thus, the genitive of bīma, a policy of insurance, is byūmuk^a.

The sound of ī cannot commence a word. In such a position ī always becomes yī. Thus, īran, an anvil, becomes yīran. In the Nāgarī character it is optionally written ईरन or यीरन, but the word is always pronounced yīran, and will be so written in this dictionary. The Persian character always has ییرن.

The letter ī is quite often interchanged with ē, both in speaking and in writing. Most Kāshmiris seem to be unable to distinguish between the two sounds.

o. This bears the same relation to ^a that o does to ^a. When ^a is followed by ^u it becomes o. Like ^a it is omitted in the Nāgarī character. In the Persian character it is represented by pēsh. Thus, from the root दृन् d^an, shake out, we have the past participle दृनु, دن, d^on^a.

ō. When wa follows a consonant it becomes ō, which is represented by व in Nāgarī and by pēsh in Persian. Thus, दद, دَد, dōd, milk. This letter has the sound of o in 'hot'. Some pronounce this with a very faint u-sound preceding the ō; thus, d^wōd. When followed by ^a or ⁱ the pronunciation of ō remains unaffected. When followed by ^u or ^ū it becomes modified to ō or ō respectively.

The letter ō is quite often interchanged with u, both in speaking and in writing. Most Kāshmiris seem to be unable to distinguish between the two sounds.

ō. This is the modified form which ō takes when followed by ^a. It is pronounced nearly the same as o. Thus, गुनु, گُن, gōn^a, a stack, is pronounced gon. This word cannot be transliterated gon^a, as it is spelt with व in the Nāgarī character.

ō. This is the modified form which ō takes when followed by ^ū. It is pronounced nearly the same as ū, but tending towards a short ō. Thus, छूप, چپ, shōp^a, silent (fem.), has a sound which lies between shūp and shōp.

o. This is the sound which a takes when followed by ^u. It is nearly the same as that of the first o in 'promote'. It is represented in Nāgarī by ओ and in the Persian character by pēsh. Thus, बहु, بَد, boḍ^a, great. We sometimes meet this letter when a is followed by an ordinary u, as in ogun^a for agun^a (also used) fire. When, in the process of declension or conjugation or for any other reason, the ^u or u disappears, the raison d'être for the o disappears also, and it reverts to the original a, which is then, as before, subject to further changes. Thus, the dative singular of boḍ^a is baḍis, the agent singular is bāḍⁱ, and the direct feminine singular is būḍ^a. Similarly, the dative singular of ogun is ag^anas.

ō 1. This is the long ō of Hindī, pronounced like the second o in 'promote'. It is represented in Nāgarī by ओ and in the Persian character by wāw. Thus, पोश, پوش, pōsh, a flower. When ō is followed by any mātrā-vowel it becomes ū. Thus, from pōthun, to be fat, we have pūth^arāwun, to make fat; from the base bōl- we have būlⁱ, speech, but dat. sing. bōlē; from bōzun, to hear, we have the participle būz^a (masc.) and būz^a (fem.).

Unlike u and ū, the letter ō can commence a word, e.g. ōra-kani, thence.

The letter ō is quite often interchanged with ū, both in speaking and in writing. Most Kāshmiris

For words beginning with ē, i, ī, see under yē, yī, yī respectively, and for words beginning with u, ū, see under wu, wū respectively.

seem to be unable to distinguish between the two sounds.

ō 2 ओ । असु, adv. yes. ō-tu ओ-तु । आं तु, adv. yes but, yes with a reservation.

ô. This letter bears the same relation to ā that o does to a. It is the form that ā takes when followed by ^u (or in some cases by u, see ā). It has the sound of a prolonged broad ô, nearly the equivalent to that of the o in 'glory'. Like ô it is represented in Nāgarī by ओ, and in Persian by wāw. Thus, from the base māl- with ^u added, we have मोल, مول, mōl^u, a father.

ö. This letter bears nearly the same relation to ā that ü does to a. It is the form that ā takes when followed by i or ^ü. As explained under ā, it also often takes this form when followed by an ordinary i, or even when in a monosyllable and not followed by any mātrā-vowel. It is sounded something like a much prolonged German ö. It is represented in Nāgarī by आँ and in the Persian character by ī. Thus, मालि, مال, mōlⁱ, fathers; आँस, آس, ōs, face.

u. This is the ^u-mātrā vowel. At the end of a syllable it is silent, but when followed by a consonant in the same syllable it becomes an ordinary u. Thus, kor^u, pronounced kor; kor^u-thas, pronounced korthas, and kor^un, pronounced korun. Under most circumstances it affects the pronunciation of the vowel of the preceding syllable, e.g. changing ^a to ^o, a to o, ā to ô, ê to yo, i to yu, ī to yū, and ô to ū. A preceding u or ū, however, it leaves unchanged. It is represented, when final, in Nāgarī by उ, and is usually omitted in the Persian character. Thus, कर, کر, kor^u, done; बड़, بڑ, bod^u, great. When medial, it is represented as an ordinary u. Thus, करन, کرن, korun, he did.

u. This is the regular u of Hindī, pronounced like the u in 'full'. It is represented in Nāgarī by उ and in the Persian character by pēsh. Thus, कुस, کس, kus, who? This vowel is not affected by any mātrā-vowel.

The sound of u cannot commence a word. In such a position u always becomes wu. Thus, udar, a plateau, becomes wudar. In the Nāgarī character it is optionally spelt उडर or वुडर, but the word is always pronounced wudar, and will be so written in this dictionary. In the Persian character it is always ودر.

The letter u is quite often interchanged with ô, both in speaking and in writing. Most Kāshmirīs seem to be unable to distinguish between the two sounds.

ū. This is the long ū of Hindī, pronounced like the ū in 'rule'. It is represented in Nāgarī by ऊ, and in the Persian character by wāw preceded by pēsh. Thus, चूर, چور, sūr, a thief. Like u, this ū is not affected by any mātrā-vowel.

As in the case of u, the sound of ū cannot commence a word. In such a position it becomes wū. Thus, ūth, a camel, becomes wūth. In the Nāgarī character it is optionally spelt ऊँठ or वूँठ, but the word is always pronounced wūth, and will be so written in this dictionary. In the Persian character it is always ووت.

The letter ū is quite often interchanged with ô, both in speaking and in writing. Most Kāshmirīs seem to be unable to distinguish between the two sounds.

ü. This is the ^ü-mātrā vowel. At the end of a syllable, like ^u, it is silent; and when followed by a consonant in the same syllable, it is pronounced as a very short German ü. Thus, kür^ü, pronounced kür; kür^ü-thas, pronounced kürthas; kür^ün, pronounced kür^ün, with the second syllable short; and gāt^üj^ü, pronounced gāt^üj. Under most circumstances, when original, it affects the pronunciation of the vowel of the preceding syllable, e.g. changing ^a to ^ü, a to ü, ā to ö, ê to ë, ē to ī, ô to ū. A preceding i, ī, u, or ū, however, it leaves unchanged. When ^a is changed to ^ü, under the influence of a following ^ü, this new, secondary, ^ü does not, in its turn, affect a preceding vowel. Thus, gāt^üj^ü becomes gāt^üj^ü, not göt^üj^ü. It is represented in Nāgarī by ए, and, when final, is generally omitted in the Persian character. When not final it is sometimes represented by zabar and sometimes by zēr. Thus, कूर, کر, kür^ü; बूड़, بڑ, būd^ü, great (fem.). करन, کرن, kür^ün.

ü. This is the sound which a takes when followed by ^ü. It is nearly the same as the short German ü. It is represented in Nāgarī by अँ and in the Persian character by zabar. Thus, बूड़, بڑ, būd^ü, great (fem.). When in the process of declension or conjugation or for any other reason the ^ü disappears, the raison d'être for the ü disappears also, and it reverts to the original a, as explained under the head of o, q.v.

ū. This letter, which is peculiar to the Kāshmirī, is pronounced something like a long-drawn German ü. It is represented in the Nāgarī character by ऊँ, and in the Persian usually by yē, as in सूत, سیت, sūty, with. The vowel often represents the diphthong ai, followed by i or ^ü. Thus, from the base kait- we have a fem. sing. kū^ü, how much? and a pl. masc. dir. kūtⁱ.

 sprouted; (of milk) not properly or entirely curdled; (of a portable brazier or kīg^ar^a) not showing signs of fire, half-lighted.

ada अद। ततः adv. then, thereafter, thereupon, therefore (both of time and of causality). Very common with interrogatives, in which case its use closely resembles that of the Hindi tō, as in the following. -kōr -कोर। तर्हि कस्मिन्पार्थे adv. then where? then in what direction? as if we were to say, "if it's not there, then where is it?" i.e. "it's nowhere". -kōr-kun -कोर-कुन। तर्हि कस्मिन्पार्थे, the same as ada-kōr. -kōra-kani -कोर-कनि। तर्हि कस्मात्पार्थेतः adv. then whence? -kus -कुस। तर्हि कः m.an. (f.an. -kōssa -कस्स, inan. -kyāh -क्याह), adj. pron. then who? then what? hence, then there is no one, or nothing; (inanimate) what else, of course.
 -kus-sanā -कुस-सना। तर्हि कः ननु, the same as adakus. -kus ta ada-kas -कुस त अद-कस। तर्हि कः कस्मि, then who, and then to whom? i.e. there is no one (to give), and therefore no one to whom to give (or no one need expect anything). -kati -कति। तर्हि कुत्र, or -kati-sanā -कति-सना। तर्हि कुत्र स्थितः adv. then where?
 (used after a verb signifying 'to put', etc.). -kot^a -कंतु। तर्हि कुत्र, or -kot^a-kun -कंतु-कुन। तर्हि कस्मिन्पार्थे
 adv. then where? then in what direction? -kūt^a -कूतु। तर्हि कियान् (f. -kūš^a -कूशू), or -kūt^a-sanā -कूतु-सना। तर्हि कियान् ननु adj. then how much? -kūt^a -कूति। तर्हि कति m.pl. (f. -kūṣa -कूष or -kaṣa -कैष), or -kūt^a-sanā -कूति-सना। तर्हि कियन्तो ननु, then how many? -kētha -क्वथ । तर्हि कथम्, or -kētha-sanā -क्वथ-सना । तर्हि कथं ननु, or -kētha-pōthī -क्वथ-पांठि । तर्हि केन प्रकारेण, or -kētha-pōthī-sanā -क्वथ-पांठि-सना । तर्हि केन प्रकारेण ननु adv. then how? then in what manner? -kōtāh -कोताह । तर्हि कियान् (f. -kaibāh -कैबाह), or -kōtāh-sanā -कोताह-सना । तर्हि कियान् ननु adj. then how much? -kaityāh -कैत्याह । तर्हि कियन्तः (f. -kaibāh -कैबाह), or -kaityāh-sanā -कैत्याह-सना । तर्हि कियन्तो ननु adj. then how many? -kūtyun -कूत्युन । तर्हि कियत्संख्याकः (मूख्यः) (f. -kūtin -कुंतिन), or -kūtyun-sanā -कूत्युन-सना । तर्हि कियत्संख्याकः adj. then consisting of how many? then of what price? -kawa -कव । तर्हि कुतः, or -kawa-sanā -कव-सना । तर्हि कुतो नाम, or -kawa-kani -कव-कनि । तर्हि केन कारणेन, or -kawa-kani-sanā -कव-कनि-सना । तर्हि केन कारणेन स्वित् adv. then for what reason? then why? -kyāh-ō -क्याहो । तर्हि किं भोः adv. then what, sir? i.e. here it is, do you want anything else? what else? of course. -kyuth -कुथु । तर्हि कीदृशः (f. -kiśh -किश्), or -kyuth-sanā -कुथु-सना । तर्हि कीदृक् ननु adj. then of what kind?

ada is also frequently employed with verbs expressing propriety or necessity, and is then equivalent to the Hindi tō. Thus, ada goṣh^u tot^u gaṣhun^u अद गंछु तंतु गछुनु । तर्हि योग्यं तत्र गन्तव्यमासीत्, then it is proper to go there, in that case you should go there. —lagi tati bihun^u —लगि तति बिजुनु । ततः संगतं तत्रा-सितव्यं, then (in that case) it is proper to settle there. —pazi tati dapun^u —पजि तति दपुनु । ततो योग्यं तत्र वक्तव्यम्, then (in that case) it is proper to tell (it) there.

ada combined with vocative particles often expresses simply 'yes', and with an interrogative adverb simply 'no', in the sense of agreeing or refusing to do something that one has been asked to do. Thus, adā (ada + a) अदा । अस्तु adv. yes (addressed to an inferior). adō (ada + ō) अदो । अस्तु adv. yes, that's right (addressed to an inferior who is at a distance). ada-bā अद-बा । अस्तु भोः adv. yes (in addressing a male of equal rank). -biñ^u -बिजू । अस्तु भोः adv. good, yes (in addressing a female of equal rank). -kaṭi -कति । नहि adv. then where? hence, in the sense of a negative, 'no.' -sō -सा । अस्तु भोः adv. good; yes, sir (respectfully addressed to a male). -kyā -क्या । अस्तु adv. good, yes (addressed to a person present), of course. -kyā-bā -क्या-बा । तर्हि किं भोः adv. good, yes (addressed by a man to a woman, or by a man to an equal). -kyā-biñ^u -क्या-बिजू । तर्हि किम् अयि adv. good, yes (addressed by a man to a woman of equal rank). -kyā-sō -क्या-सा । तर्हि किं भोः adv.

good, yes (used respectfully by a man). aday अदय । अस्तु adv. good; yes (used in answer to an inferior or younger woman).

ada 2 अड । अस्त्रीनि (for ada 1 see ad), f.pl. bones, especially those of the forearm and of the shin. -sūr -सूर । अस्थिभस्म m. bone-ashes; a severe beating, which (metaphorically) reduces the bones to powder. -trakor^u -त्रकूर । कठोरास्थिमान् adj. (f. -trakūr^u -त्रकूर), having hard or strong bones (especially those of the forearm and shin); (of a woman) one whose forearm or shin-bones are so hard that they do not easily allow bracelets, etc., to be put upon them.

(whether this is a defect or a perfection).
ödidⁱ आदिदि। अद्यतनदिनयातकाले adv., i.q. ödi, q.v. adog^u अदगु। अहतः, अनाहतः adj. (f. adüj^u 1 अदजू), not struck, not hit (by a blow of the fist or a hurled missile); not pounded (on a stone or in a mortar) (of spices, food, etc.).
adög^u अदगु। अनवखण्डितः adj. (f. adöj^u अदजू), not husked (as of paddy in a mortar). ādⁱ-hyol^u अदि-ह्योलु। अर्धपणः m. a square coin of the value of half a pice; the Hindi adhela. Formerly in Kashmir articles of small value were purchased with cowries. Twelve cowries were called a bahāgañ बहागञ्ज; twenty-five were called a pūshuh पूशुह; fifty or half a hundred were called ādⁱ-hyol^u अदि- ह्योलु; a hundred was called a hath हथ, and was considered the equivalent of one pice. In the rural parts of the country a pice is still called hath. Cf. bahāgañ, and RT.Tr. ii, 312. adij^u अदिजु। अस्त्रि f. a bone (cf. K.Pr. 173, 226). This is the general term, cf. ada and adyul^u. It is the feminine form of the latter. ādiji-khōkhur अदिजि-खौखुर। an 2 अन् pron. suff. of the 3rd pers. sg. in either the acc. or the ag. case, and added to any finite form of a verb. If the verbal form ends in a vowel, the initial a is dropped. Thus, karān chuh-an करान् कुहुन्, thou makest him; koru-n करुन्, made by him, he made. If the verb be in the 3rd person, an in the sense of the acc. is not used, as अस् being substituted, as in suh karān chu-s सुह करान् कुस्, not suh karān chu-n सुह करान् कुन्, he makes him (Gr.Gr. 185). an अन् is also used to indicate the nom. case, when the nom. represents the object of a transitive verb in a past tense, as in trōwth-an, he was released by thee, thou releasedst him (Gr.M. 1057), so mōka-lōwth-an (Siv. 3).

an 3 अन् a primary suffix forming abstract nouns from certain verbal roots. In the case of three verbs whose roots end in ē (viz., chyon^a च्यन्, to drink; khyon^a ख्यन्, to eat; and hyon^a ह्यन्, to place) the initial a is dropped, and the abstract noun is masc. Thus, cēn च्यन्, drinking. In the case of the other verbs with which this suff. is used, the abs. noun is fem. A list of these verbs will be found in Gr.Gr. 120 ff.

an 4 अन्, anī 1 अनी, anas अनस्, or anan अनन्, a secondary suff. added pleonastically to adverbs of place (see Gr.Gr. 155).

ān 1 आन् । आज्ञा f. an order, command, used in the following: -mōnī -मांनी । परस्परआज्ञापानम् f. obeying (mutual) orders, mutual respect; mutual confidence, mutual loyalty. —mānūn^a —मानन् । आज्ञामाननम् f. inf. to obey orders; to become subject to anyone.

treating without excuse, ill-treating or striking the wrong person. -raz -रज् । अन्धपङ्क्तिः f. a string of blind men. A number of blind men form a line and go along the pilgrim-roads begging. The front man sings a song, to which the others reply in chorus. -sōr^ū

-साह । अन्धमार्गणा f. search by a blind man; hence, met., searching for anything in the dark; or searching futilely and without system for anything lost or destroyed. -thapa -थप । अन्धावलम्बनम् m. pl. grasping by a blind man; hence, met., when the proper resource is wanting, using the first thing that comes to hand as a substitute, or taking hold of anything without first seeing what it is.

anis mush^ath hāwūn^ū na sawāb na gōnāh अनिस् मुशथ हावून् न सवाब न खनाह । निष्फलप्रयासः to shake one's fist at a blind man is neither a good action nor a sin (he does not see it, and it neither pleases him nor angers him); used of making an exertion the result of which is absolutely indifferent.

añē-āchi-gāsh अञ-अङ्घि-गाश । अन्धाविप्रकाशः m. the light of a blind eye; the little, but much treasured, light of a blind eye; hence, met., an only son, a darling son, a favourite son. -chapiür -कपूर । क्रीडाविशेषः f. a children's game. asun असुन् । हसनम् conj. 1 (1 p.p. os^a असु; 2 p.p. asōv असोव), to laugh (K.Pr. 18). In the past tenses this verb is construed impersonally. Thus, osu-m असुम, it was laughed by me, I laughed; osu-n असुन, he or she laughed; os^a असु, we laughed, and so on.

asun असुन् m. a laugh (K.Pr. 260, Śiv. 788). Its abl. is asana असन, as in the following.

asana-hanā असन-हना f. a small laugh, a smile. —karūn^a —करंजू, to smile (Gr.M.).

asān-asān आसान-आसान । अत्यनन्देन, अतिशीघ्रम् pres. part., laughing, laughing; hence, as adv., cheerfully, happily, joyfully, and met., very quickly, speedily (Śiv. 899, 917).

āsī-āsī असि-असि । हसित्वा हसित्वा conj. part. laughing, laughing; hence, as adv., joyfully, quickly, speedily.

āsun आसुन् । भवनम् conj. 2 (1 p.p. ôs^a ओसु, pl. ôsī आसि; f. ôs^a आसू, pl. āsa 2 आस; 2 p.p. āsyōv आस्योव is not used), (lit.) to sit; hence, to remain, continue, abide (Śiv. 1832); to be, to become (passim). The past tense is employed as the ordinary past tense of the verb substantive. Thus, ôsus ओसुस, I was. Similarly, for all other tenses except the present, 'I am' being chhus हूस्. The present of this verb indicates condition. Thus, suh chhuh yishanwōl^a āsān indicates that he is not only eager, but that he is in a general condition of eagerness (so Śiv. 90, 1040).

The verb is also employed as an auxiliary, like the Hindōstānī thā or hōnā; thus it forms an imperfect, as in suh ôs^a karān, he was doing; a pluperfect tāmⁱ ôs^a kor^a-mot^a, he had done, and other tenses, such as suh āsī karān (wōh jāntā hōgā), he is probably doing, hargāh bōh karān āsahō (agar māi karta hōtā), had I been doing, or yēduwai mē āsihē kor^a-mot^a (agar māi-nē kiya hōtā), had I done. As a verb substantive it often governs a dative of possession, then meaning 'to have'. Thus, mē āsī or āsē-m, there will be to me, I shall have; mē ôs^a or ôsu-m, I had. Gr.M., K.Pr. 114, YZ. 245.

This verb has a benedictive mood, which is thus conjugated: sg. 2, āshēkh आशख, mayst thou be; pl. 2, āshiv आशिव, sg. and pl. 3, āshēn आशेन (Śiv. 188, 940).

In poetry the pres. part. is sometimes āsan आसन or āsana आसन, instead of āsān आसान (e.g. Śiv. 1040, 1724).

āsun-bāsun असुन्-वासुन् । द्रव्यसंपत्तिः m.inf. being and appearance, or possibly a jingling repetition of āsun; hence, a person's possessions, property.

ötagüj^u आतगजू । चैत्रम् f. name of a place on the eastern side of Śrinagar and to the south of the temple of Gōpāditya. It is sacred to the sun, its ancient name being āditya-guhā. Cf. RT.Tr. II, 453 ff.

ata-gath 1 अत-गथ । असकृद्वसागमः m. (sg. dat. -gatas -गतस्), coming and going backwards and forwards; the going and returning of being born and reborn again and again (Śiv. 1364, 1808); trouble, worry, running hither and thither (K.Pr. 73). In Śiv. 1364 there is a pun on this word and on ata-gath 2.

ata-gath 2 अत-गथ । दायविशेषः m. (sg. dat. -gatas -गतस्), a present of money, salt, and cakes given by her parents to a bride when setting out for her husband's house (K.Pr. 73, Śiv. 1364; cf. ata-gath 1).

ath 1 अथ । अद्ः pron. dem. that (within sight or pointed to), this, both substantive and adjective. It is commonly referred to the pronoun huh ऊह, q.v., and is defective. It has no nominative, the word ath अथ being the dative singular inanimate. It has three genders—(1) masculine animate, (2) feminine animate, and (3) inanimate (whether masc. or fem.). In most forms the masc. an. and the fem. an. are the same. When this is the case the form will be indicated simply by 'an.' The following forms occur: dat. sg. an. amis अमिस् (Śiv. 809 m., 874 f.); inan. ath अथ (Śiv. 47, 929); gen. sg. an. āmⁱ-sond^u अमि-सन्दु (Śiv. 806), or asond^u असन्दु (Śiv. 803, 813); inan. amyuk^u अमुकु (Śiv. 69); ag. masc. an. āmⁱ अमि (Śiv. 45); fem. ami अमि (Śiv. 91); inan. āmⁱ अमि (Śiv. 46); abl. an. and inan. ami अमि. No plural forms have been noted, nor any for the nom. sing. For the missing forms the corresponding forms of huh ऊह are employed. With emphatic y य्, ath becomes āthⁱ अथि (Śiv. 1754), āmⁱ अमि becomes āmiy अमिय (Śiv. 803), and ami अमि becomes amiy अमिय (Śiv. 648). When this pronoun is used as an adjective there are some variations in the declension. When agreeing with an animate feminine noun the dative is ami अमि, not amis अमिस्, which is the dative of the pronoun when referring as a substantive to any animate noun, whether masc. or fem. Thus, ami kōrē अमि कौर्य, to this girl. When agreeing with an inanimate noun, the only dative inanimate form used is ath अथ, which agrees with any inanimate noun in the dative singular, whether masc. or fem. Thus, ath cīzas अथ चीजस्, to this thing, ath kāmē अथ काम्य, for this work (so Śiv. 164). In other cases the distinction between animate and inanimate disappears, and the adjectival pronoun agrees with the qualified noun in gender and case like any other adjective. Thus, to take the genitive, we have masc. an. amis sāhiba-sond^u अमिस् साहिब-सन्दु, of this gentleman; inan. ami cīzuk^u अमि चीजुक, of this thing; fem. an. ami kōrē-hond^u अमि कौर्य-हन्दु, of this girl; ami jyāyē-hond^u अमि ज्याय-हन्दु, of this place (so Śiv. 91). In composition awa अव is frequently used instead of ami अमि and away अवय instead of amiy अमिय. It sometimes also becomes a अ in composition (see Gr.Gr. 151).

b व ب. The first consonant of the Kāshmīrī alphabet, the twenty-third (or, if we count ḥ, ḥh, and z, the twenty-sixth) consonant when written in the Śāradā or Nāgarī character, and the second consonant when written in the Perso-Arabic character. It has the sound of the letter b in English.

The Sanskrit aspirate sonant bha भ does not exist as a pronounced sound in Kāshmīrī. When a Hindi or Sanskrit word containing this letter also occurs in Kāshmīrī, the bh भ is represented by b व. Thus, the Sanskrit bhavati भवति, he becomes, is represented in Kāshmīrī by bōvi वुवि. In the case of words borrowed directly from Sanskrit, the bh भ is often, but not always, retained in writing in the Śāradā or Nāgarī character. Thus, the Sanskrit word Bhagavān भगवान्, a name of the Deity, appears in Kāshmīrī written in these characters both as भगवान् and as वगवान्, but the pronunciation is always bagawān. Similarly, the Sanskrit word bhakti भक्ति, faith, becomes in Kāshmīrī bākti वक्ति and other related forms, although occasionally spelt भक्ति.

In the present work, whether a word is spelt in the Nāgarī character with भ or with व, that letter will always be transliterated b, and hence words found in any native book spelt with भ should be looked up, in the English order, under b. Thus, भगवान् will be found, in alphabetical order, under bagawān. As a rule, spellings with भ will not be indicated in this Dictionary, even in the Nāgarī character. The principal exception to this rule will be found in the case of proper names, in which it is most usual to preserve the भ in native writing. Thus, the Sanskrit proper name Bhairava भैरव, a name of Śiva, will be shown in this Dictionary as bairav वै(भै)रव.

ba ب, the Persian inseparable prep., with, by, for, from, in, etc. As in bakār بکار, for use, serviceable. Cf. W. 99.

bā 1 با, the Persian prep., with, by, possessed of, as in bā-adab, with politeness, politely. Cf. W. 99.

bā 2 बा, an interjectional suff. used in addressing males. It means literally 'brother!', and is employed as follows:—hē nārān bā, O Nārān, in addressing a priest, a person of the middle class or a servant. If he is old, hata-sō-hē . . . bā or hata-bā-hē . . . bā is used. If a woman addresses a man or a woman respectfully she says hata-bā . . . bā, or if addressing a familiar or junior, hata-bā . . . au or hata-bā . . . a, or when addressing persons by their proper names only, hata-bā . . . a-bāyē or hata-bā . . . a-bāyau. Other words are often prefixed, as in ada-bā (v. ada), āhan-bā (v. āhan), and na-bā, No, sir. Cf. Gr.Gr. 99 ff., W. 101, and L. 279. For examples of its use see K.Pr. 49, 232; Śiv. 1244.

bāi 2, m. a treaty (El.).

bāū, m. the forearm (El.).

bē 1 or bē वे or वे, the Persian privative particle, prefixed to other words, as in bē-adab, without politeness, insolent. It is equivalent in meaning to the Kāshmīrī suff. rost^u (q.v.). Although a Persian prefix it is also commonly employed, usually under the form bē व्य, with non-Persian words, as in bē-bayē, fearless. For words commencing with this prefix see s.vv. It is often used as a mere preposition, governing another noun, and meaning 'without', as in yilm bē bahs, knowledge without argument (K.Pr. 216). Similarly, adverbial phrases, such as bē sabab, without cause, causelessly.

bē 2 بے, the name of the second letter of the Persian alphabet. Alif-bē = a b c, the alphabet.

bi बि, pron. adj. other, another. This word is not used alone, but forms the base of the declension of byākh (bi + akh), q.v. Its dat. sg. bēyē or biyē (q.v. s.v.) is used as an adv. or conjunct. meaning 'moreover', 'and', 'also'.

bōh बूह । अहम् c.g., pron. of 1st pers. I (YZ. 19). In poetry this word sometimes takes the form bō वो or bū वू. With the emph. part. y य्, it takes the form bōy बूय (Śiv. 24) or buy बूय्, even I, I indeed. So also with the conj. ay अय्, if, we have bōy बूय्, if I (Gr.Gr. 257), and similarly we have bō-ti बूति, I also (Gr.M., Śiv. 73, 119, 988, 1608), bōnai बूने, not I (Gr.Gr. 22). This pronoun has no gen. sg. or pl., employing instead thereof the possessive prons. myōn^a, my, and sōn^a, our, qq.v. In the sg. for all cases exc. the nom. it has mē म्य (Śiv. 511). In the pl. its nom. is āsⁱ 1 असि (Śiv. 984); other cases, exc. gen., asē अस्स (Śiv. 1284). (For āsⁱ 2 see asun.)

As in the case of the other personal pronouns, this pron. has a series of pronominal suffixes, but only for the sg. number. It has no suff. for the pl. These suffixes can be optionally added to any finite form of a verb. The suff. of the nom. sing. is s स्, and of all other cases of the sg. is m म्. These are added directly to forms ending in vowels, but when added to a form ending in a consonant they take a अ as a junction-vowel. Thus pok^a + s becomes pokus पकुस्, I went; kor^a + m becomes korum कुरम्, made by me, I made; korun + s becomes kor^anas कुरन्स्, I was made by him, he made me.

There are certain irregularities in adding these suffixes. The principal are: (1) A final h is dropped before them, and a final kh (the suffix of the nom. of the 2nd pers. sg. and of the 3rd pers. pl.) becomes h.
Thus chhuh + m becomes chhum चुम्, there is to me, I have; korukh + s becomes kor^ahas कुरुहस्, I was made by them, they made me. (2) Before them the term. av becomes ō and iv becomes yū. Thus karav + m becomes karōm करोम्, we shall make for me, and kariv + m becomes karyūm कर्युम्, make ye me, or for me. (3) When added to the 3rd sg. fut. the final i of the verb is changed to ē. Thus kari + m becomes karēm कर्येम्, he shall make me. (4) When added to the 2nd sg. impv. they take u as a junction vowel. Thus kar + m becomes karum करम्, make thou me. (Cf. Gr.Gr. 87, 181, 183, 257.)

bōh-tāna wanānⁱ बुहु-तान वननि । कल्पितप्रलापः m. pl. inf. to tell an imaginary story, so as to gain another's confidence.

asē अस्से, see ab. asē-ti pāthi अस्से-ति पाठि । अस्माकमप्यस्तु interj. may that be my luck !, an exclamation used at seeing another's good fortune.

āsⁱ अंसि, we; see ab. āsⁱ gāhⁱ baḍānⁱ अंसि गंहि बड़नि । वयं वर्धिसीमहि interj. may we flourish ! may we prosper ! lit. it was proper that we should go forward: —gāhⁱaw zēnānⁱ — गहव् जेनेनि । वयं जीयास्व interj. may we be victorious ! lit. it is proper that we should conquer. —gay asi — गय असि । अस्वभिमानोक्तिः interj. indicating self-satisfaction, 'I'm the man !,' lit. we (honorific pl.) are we indeed.

bō बो, bū बु, see ab. bōy बुय्, buy बुय्, even I, I indeed, if I, see ab. bō-ti बुति, I also, see ab. bō-nai बुने, not I, see ab.

mē म्य acc. dat. ag. or abl. sg., see ab. mē-ti म्यति, me also, etc. (Śiv. 521, 525, 1165, 1434). mē-y म्यय्, even me, me indeed, me only, etc. (Śiv. 544, 634, 644, 692, 724, 760, 768, 900, 901, 1257).

bōhⁱ बाहि card. o.g. the special form which bāh, twelve, takes in multiplication by a number exceeding ten. Thus, kāh bōhⁱ akh hath ta dōyētr^h काह बाहि अक् दह त दययत्र, eleven twelves (are) a hundred and thirty-two (Gr.Gr. 86).

bahādur or bahōdur بهادر adj. c.g. and subst. m. brave, bold, valiant, courageous (W. 117); as a title, Kampani b^o, कम्पनी बहादुर, the East India Company; of. K.Pr. 189, 190. W. spells this word bōhōdur.

bahāgun^u बहागुनु । द्वादशगुणितः adj. (f. bahāgūn^u बहागुनु), multiplied by twelve, twelvefold; (of a rope, or the like) twelve-stranded.

bahugan-khūnd^u बहगुन-खण्ड । खण्डः खण्डितो वा खासीविशेषः f. (sg. dat. -khanjē -खन्ज), a broken vessel, as ab.; a small bahugun.

bahāgañ बहागम् । अष्टौवराटकाः, काकिणी f. a certain nominal coin, the value of the eighth part of a British pice. The latter is now used as the equivalent of the old nominal coin (representing a hundred cowries) called the hath or 'hundreder'. Bahāgañ therefore means 'a twelver' (for 'a twelve-and-a-half'). As sixty-four cowries now go to a pice, therefore a bahāgañ now equals eight cowries. Cf ādⁱ-hyol^a and RT.Tr. ii, 312.

८ च ह. The second consonant of the Kāshmirī alphabet in the Roman character, the sixth when written in the Śāradā or Nāgarī character, and the eighth when written in the Perso-Arabic character. It has the sound of ch in the English 'church'.

Its aspirate is ch च ह, the seventh consonant of the Kāshmirī alphabet when written in the Śāradā or Nāgarī character.

A c or ch occurring in a Sanskrit or Hindī word is very frequently changed respectively to ṣ or ṣh in Kāshmirī, which are in Nāgarī commonly written च and छ, and in Perso-Arabic چ and چھ. Thus, the Sanskrit candraḥ चन्द्रः becomes Kāshmirī ṣandṛ चन्द्र, and the Hindī chhōṭā becomes Kāshmirī ṣhot छोट. In fact, to Kāshmirī ears, c is ṣ followed by y, and ch is ṣh followed by y. In other words, to a Kāshmirī, c च is really cy च्य, and ch छ is really chy छ्य. It thus follows that many Kāshmirīs, when writing their own language in the Śāradā or Nāgarī character, put no dot under च or छ, when these represent ṣ or ṣh respectively; but, on the contrary, represent c by च्य and ch by छ्य. So strongly is the y-sound heard in these two letters by Kāshmirīs, that ca च is usually pronounced cē च्य, and cha छ is usually pronounced chē छ्य, ya य following a consonant being always sounded as ē or yē (see article ē). Thus, the word caras चरस् is usually pronounced cēras चरस्, and the word chakun चकुन् is usually pronounced chēkun चकुन्. In the Śāradā or Nāgarī character, each method of writing each of these two words is equally common. In the Perso-Arabic character (in which the short vowels are generally omitted) this question of spelling hardly arises. Similarly, the word cāra चार is quite commonly written cyāra च्यार, and chot छोट is equally commonly written chyot छ्योट. Again, the 1 p.p. of the verb chōrun चोरन् should according to rule be chūr चूर, but we also find it written chyūr च्यूर, which is liable to confusion with another chyūr च्यूर, the regular 1 p.p. of the verb chīrun चीरन्, qq.v.

Hence, if a word commencing with cē, cy, chē, or chy is not found in this Dictionary, it should be looked up under ca, c, cha, or ch, and vice versa respectively. Important words which have been noted as actually occurring in literature under both forms are as a rule given under both, with appropriate cross-references, each in alphabetical order; but it will be understood that it would be impossible to give every word commencing with c or ch twice over, in its two different spellings.

cāh^h चाहि, cāhy चाह्य, or cāy चाय (also spelt cyāh^h चाहि, cyāy चाय), f. tea (K.Pr. 39, Gr.M.). According to El. two kinds of tea are sold in Kāshmir—Suratī and Sabz. Suratī tea is like English tea, and Sabz tea is brick tea imported via Ladāk and the Panjāb. There are two ways of preparing tea in Kāshmir. For mugal cāh^h, five cups of water are poured upon a tōlā of tea. It is then boiled for half an hour, when more cold water is added, along with condiments and sugar, after which it is boiled for half an hour more. Milk is then added. It is now ready for drinking. The colour is reddish. The second mode of preparing tea is called shirⁱ cāhⁱ. The tea is placed in the teapot with a little soda and water and boiled for half an hour. Milk, salt, and butter are then added, after which it is boiled for another half-hour, when it is ready for drinking. According to K.Pr. (l.c.) the salt used in the infusion of tea is called phul. It is found in the Nubra valley in Ladāk, and contains the carbonate and sulphate of soda and a little of the chloride of sodium. cāhⁱ karūn^u, f.inf. to make tea (El.).

chih 2 चिह । ईषदाघातः f. (sg. dat. chish^u चिषु), a slight accidental blow (esp. of something hard) on the edge or point of anything, a knock.

chih 2 चीह f. a very small amount of anything, as in ash^uka chih, a very little love (H. vii, 30).

chuh 1 कुह, vb. subst. This verb is defective, being only used in the present tense and rarely in the imperative; it is participial in form, being liable to change for gender. Its forms are m.sg. 1 chus चुस, 2 chukh चुख, 3 chuh कुह; pl. 1 chih चिह, 2 chiwa चिव (chiv चिव, m.c. in H. vii, 9), 3 chih चिह; f.sg. 1 chēs चस, 2 chēkh चख, 3 chēh चह; pl. 1 chēh चह, 2 chēwa चव, 3 chēh चह. The final h of the forms chuh, chih, and chēh is added only to aid pronunciation, and is dropped before all suffixes, as in chu-na चुन, he is not, chēm चम, she is to me. When a suffix commences with a vowel the u of chuh becomes w, and the i and ē of chih and chēh become y. Thus, chuh + ā becomes chwā क्वा, is he? and chih + ā and chēh + ā both become chyā च्या, are they (m.)? is she? or are they (f.)?

In H. vii, 9 a pres. cond. pl. 2 chiv चिव occurs.

For the other tenses of the vb. subst. the vb. āsun (q.v.) is employed.

Chuh is also employed as an auxiliary verb, forming, with the pres. part., a present tense, as in suh chuh karān, he makes or is making, and, with the perf. part., a perfect tense, as in tāmⁱ chuh kor^u-mot^u, he has made. In such cases verbal suffixes are added to the auxiliary verb and not to the participle. There is this peculiarity, that when this occurs the suffix of the agent case of the 2nd pers. sing. is generally y, not the th used with the past tense. Thus, tē koru-th, thou madest, but tē chu-y kor^a-mot^a, thou hast made.

As a vb. subst. chuh is very commonly used with a dative of possession, thus providing Kāshmiri with a verb signifying 'to have'. Thus, mē chuh or (with suffix) chu-m, there is to me, i.e. I have.

Except as stated above in regard to the agent of the 2nd pers. sing., this verb takes the usual pronominal and adverbial suffixes. Thus, chus, I am; chus-ay, I am for thee; chukh, thou art; chukh-a, art thou? chuh-an (for chukh-an) karān, thou makest him; chuh-an-a karan, dost thou make him? chwā (chuh + ā), is he? chyā (chēh + ā), is she? chu-na, he is not; chu-nā, is he not? chu-y, he is to thee, or he is verily; chu-y-ē, is he to thee; chu-s, he (or there) is to him; chī-s, they (m., or there) are to him; chē-na, she is not; chē-nā, is she not? chē-y, she is to thee, or she is verily; chē-y-ē, is she to thee? chē-s, she (or there or they, f.) is to him, and so on. In H. xii, 6, chiy is used instead of chuy, he is verily. Cf. Gr.Gr. 189 and Gr.M.

chuh 2 चुह m. onomat. the noise made in driving a horse, tehk (H. xi, 8).

chuhan चुहन, chuhana चुहन, see chuh.

El. makes this word f. With the suff. of indef. art. we get cīzāh चीज़ाह (Śiv. 1650, Rām. 152, 1464).

d द ३. The third consonant of the Kāshmirī alphabet in the Roman character. It is the eighteenth (or, if we count ḥ, ḥh, and z, the twenty-first) consonant when written in the Śāradā or Nāgarī character, and the twelfth consonant when written in the Perso-Arabic character. It is pronounced as in India proper, with a sound much softer and more dental than the English d.

The Sanskrit aspirate dha ध does not exist as a pronounced sound in Kāshmirī. When a Hindī or Sanskrit word containing this letter also occurs in Kāshmirī, the dh ध is represented by d द. Thus, the Sanskrit dhanam धनं, wealth, is represented in Kāshmirī by dana दन. In the case of words borrowed directly from Sanskrit, the dh ध is often, but not always, retained in writing in the Śāradā or Nāgarī character. Thus, the Sanskrit Dharma-rāja धर्मराज, a name of the god Yama, appears in Kāshmirī written in these characters both as धर्मराज and दर्मराज, but the pronunciation is always darma-rāza.

In the present work, whether a word is spelt in the Nāgarī character with ध or with द, that letter will always be transliterated d, and hence words found in any native book spelt with ध should be looked up in the English order, under d. Thus धर्मराज will be found, in alphabetical order, under darma-rāza in the article darma. As a rule, spellings with ध will not be indicated in this Dictionary, even in the Nāgarī character. The principal exception to this rule will be found in the case of proper names, in which it is most usual to preserve the ध in native writing. Thus, the Sanskrit proper name Dharma-rāja धर्मराज will be shown in this Dictionary as darma-rāza द(ध)र्मराज.

d ड ३. The fourth consonant in the Kāshmirī alphabet in the Roman character. It is the thirteenth (or, if we count ḥ, ḥh, and z, the sixteenth) consonant when written in the Śāradā or Nāgarī character, and the thirteenth consonant when written in the Perso-Arabic character. It is the cerebral ḍ of India proper, and has no corresponding sound or character in Arabic or Persian, or, indeed, in any European language. It has something of the sound of the English d in 'drum', but is properly pronounced by turning back the tongue and pressing the under surface of the tip against the palate.

The Sanskrit aspirate dha द does not exist as a pronounced sound in Kāshmirī. When a Hindī or Sanskrit word containing this letter also occurs in Kāshmirī the dh द is represented by d ड. Thus the Hindī dhēr डेर, a heap, is represented in Kāshmirī by dēr डेर.

In most Indo-Aryan vernaculars of the present day, including Hindī and Pañjābī, ḍ ड, when non-initial, is pronounced as a cerebral ṛ र. This cerebral ṛ र does not occur in Kāshmirī, the pronunciation as ḍ ड being generally retained, even when non-initial. Thus the Hindī barā बड़ा, great, is represented in Kāshmirī by bod ड. Sometimes, however, an original ḍ ड becomes a simple dental r र in Kāshmirī. Thus the Sanskrit biḍālāḥ बिडालः, a cat, becomes brōr ड्रो, and the Hindī ghōrā घोड़ा, a horse, is represented by gur डु. In the dialect of the Sindh Valley, and perhaps also elsewhere in Kashmīr, r र and ḍ ड are frequently interchanged. Thus, in a collection of Kāshmirī folk-tales collected in the Sindh Valley by Sir Aurel Stein, the word for 'daughter' is not only the Śrīnagar kūr डू, but often, even on the same page, kūd डू, and the word for 'to search' is both ḥhādun डडुन and ḥhārun डडुन.

Occasionally we find ḍ ड optionally interchanging with a dental d द, as in ḍal डल or dal दल, a leaf. dā डौ, see dāñē.

dā डौ । गोशब्दनम् m. 'onomat. the lowing of a cow, a moo (K.Pr. 72, written dan). —karun —करुन । अपहवः m.inf. to moo (K.Pr. 72); met. to hem and haw, in the sense of denying or turning off the truth, e.g. concealing or denying the existence of something entrusted for safe custody, evading the execution of an order.

This verb is very commonly used with a substantive to form a nominal compound verb. Such so-called compounds are often hardly compounds at all, each member retaining its own meaning, as in bāg dyun^u, to give a share, to divide; bal dyun^u, to give an offering, make a sacrificial offering. At other times the compound acquires a special meaning, as in āchⁱ diñ^u, to apply the eye, hence, to cast the evil eye; ongul dyun^u, to apply the finger, hence, to tickle the throat so as to promote vomiting. Such compounds will be found under the various substantives which form the first member.

The verb dyun^u is often added to the conjunctive participle of another verb, without materially altering the latter's sense, as in barun or barith dyun^u, to fill.

dinī दिनी । देयम् impers. fut. part. e.g. that which is to be given, the amount due to another.

The sound represented by this letter does not occur in Kāshmirī, although the character is often met with in borrowed Persian words, written in the Perso-Arabic character. Except by Persian scholars, the character is usually pronounced ph, or, when initial, sometimes as p. When Persian words occurring in Kāshmirī are written in the Śāradā or Roman character the letter ف is represented by ph फ. Hence, for all words commencing with f ف, see under ph फ.

G ग् ग

ग ग् ग. The sixth (or, if we count the aspirate ch as a separate letter, the seventh) consonant of the Kāshmirī alphabet, the third consonant when written in the Śāradā or Nāgarī character, and the twenty-ninth consonant when written in the Perso-Arabic character. It has the sound of the letter g in the English 'game'.

The Sanskrit aspirate sonant gha घ does not exist as a pronounced sound in Kāshmirī. When a Hindī or Sanskrit word containing this letter also occurs in Kāshmirī, the gh घ is represented by ग ग्. Thus, the Hindī ghōrā घोड़ा, a horse, is represented in Kāshmirī by gur गुरू. Some writers retain this gh घ in writing. Thus, they write घर for gara गर, a house, on the analogy of the Hindī घर; but this custom is both useless and misleading. In the present work such words will always be spelt with ग ग्, and hence words found in any native book spelt with घ should be looked up in the English order under ग ग्.

The character ग is named gagar-gō, and घ gōs-ga.

The letter غ sometimes occurring in words borrowed from Arabic or Persian is also represented in Kāshmirī by g, like which it is pronounced. Thus غالب is pronounced gōlib.

gāo गाव्, see gāv.

gī गी गी a sec. suff. forming abs. nouns, as in dātagī, generosity, from dāta, generous; zindagī, life, from zinda, living. It is derived from an older -ak-ī.

gathun 1 गहून । युक्तीभवन् conj. 2 (1 p.p. gōṣh गहू Gr.Gr. 113, 235), to be proper, right, advisable (K.Pr. 100 guts for gōṣh, YZ. 191, Śiv. 1596, Rām. 19, 154, 1137); to be necessary (L.V. 19, 29, 45, K.Pr. 69, YZ. 185, Śiv. 1705); to be wanted, desired (Śiv. 1240, 1448; Rām. 591, 658, 840; gōṣhum, I want, YZ. 463, Śiv. 1899; gathi, thou desirest, Śiv. 633). This verb is employed either actively or passively with the fut. p.p. of another verb to indicate propriety, necessity, or desire. It is only employed in the present, in the fut. (genl. with pres. signification), or in the past tense. For the present, see Gr.Gr. 183. See also Gr.Gr. 113. Thus:—

A. Actively (Gr.M., Gr.Gr. 113):—āsⁱ gathav rōzanⁱ, we are proper to be remained, i.e. we must remain; āsⁱ gathav dinⁱ, we must give; marun gōṣhus-na, I do not wish to die (Śiv. 700); bharuth gathi rāza āsun^a, Bharata should become king (Rām. 155); kāh gathēm-na dēshun^a, no one may see me (H. xii, 2).

B. Passively:—Here the personal subject (when expressed) is put either in the dative or the genitive.

(a) Person not expressed:—gathi muāph karun^a, pardon to be made is proper, please pardon (Gr.M.); jān gathi, good will be proper that, i.e. you had better (do so and so) (Gr.M.); gathi yith āsiun^a, a desire is proper to be, one should wish (yith is f.) (Gr.M.); so Śiv. 75, 1448, 1713, 1752, 1753; Rām. 19, 154; H. v, 4; xii, 19, 20.

In Rām. 1644 we find (1) the impersonal gathi mīthⁱ dinⁱ, it is proper that kisses should be given, and (2) personal gathan cēnⁱ, drinkings are proper, one should sip.

(b) Person in the dat. (Gr.M., Gr.Gr. 113):—mē gathi, there is necessary to me, I want (Gr.M.); asē gathi rōzun^a, to us to remain is necessary, we must stay (Gr.M.); asē gathi phikir^a thawūn^a, we must take thought (Gr.M.); asē gathan nākāragiyē trāwanē, we must abandon evil actions (Gr.M.). So Śiv. 1448; Rām. 79, 150, etc.; H. xii, 4, 5, 10, 13, etc. For examples of the use of this verb with pronominal suffixes, see Gr.Gr. 183. In the present tense the person must be indicated by a suffix if it is in the 1st pers. sg. or 2nd pers. sg. or pl. In the 3rd pers. the use of a suffix is optional. Thus tamis gathan chuh (or chus) zi parahō, to him it is desirable that I should read, he thinks it proper that I should read.

In other tenses when the person is the 2nd, the suffix of the dative of the pronoun must always be added to the verb, whether the full pronoun is expressed or not. Thus, yus tē gathiy, (the kind) which you want (Gr.M.); so Śiv. 707, 1224, 1705; H. xii, 7, 13.

(c) Person in the gen. (Gr.M., Gr.Gr. 114):—myōn^a gathi gathun^a, my going is proper, I must go (Gr.M.); gathi cyōn^a kōshish karūn^a, you should try (Gr.M.); cyōnⁱ gathan trih jild thawānⁱ, you must reserve three books (Gr.M.); anugrah cyōn^a gathi āsun^a, thou shouldst show favour (Śiv. 1596); cyōn^a gathi zyun^a sōmb^arun^a, thou must collect firewood (H. xii, 20); tuhond^a gathi yun^a, you must come (H. xii, 15).

This verb means, primarily, 'to go,' but is often used secondarily in the sense of 'being' or 'becoming'. It is hence one of the most frequently used verbs in the language.

To go, proceed (L.V. 19, 41; Śiv. 16, 53-5; Rām. 21, 109, 391, et passim); to go, go away, depart (L.V. 95, Rām. 52, 104, 211, 215, et passim); to go, to disappear (L.V. 9, Śiv. 1276, Rām. 219); to go, become absent, to die (Rām. 275, 367, 876); to go (to any place) (L.V. 36, Rām. 64, 106, 418); to go (into), to be put or to fall (into anything) (Śiv. 1210, Rām. 343); to go (of a letter in the post) (Gr.M.); to go (to a person or place), to reach (of news, etc.) (Śiv. 1225, Rām. 281, 508, 737, 1757); to march, start on the march (of an army) (Gr.M.); to go (to a certain condition, e.g. to joy, to become joyful) (Śiv. 924; similarly, Śiv. 1642, 1739, 1760, Rām. 32); to go, lead (of a road) (Gr.M.); to go, elapse, pass (of time, etc.) (H. viii, 10; Śiv. 22, 706, 1704, 1717; Rām. 535, 787, 947, 1297); to go, be in motion (of the wind) (El.); to go, as we say of a worn-out garment, 'to go' (at the knees, etc.), cf. khōn, khūr^u 1.

āshṭaras gathun, to go to astonishment, to be surprised, filled with wonder (Rām. 567, 934); manas gōs, it went into his mind, he determined, made up his mind (to do so and so) (Rām. 557, 619, 623, 1012); reflected, considered (Rām. 1346, 1348); māra gathun, to go to death, to meet a violent death (H. viii, 11; x, 7; Rām. 701, 868, 972); phikiri gathun, to go into meditation, to meditate (Rām. 1368); pānas gathun, to go for oneself, to go one's way without let or hindrance (H. iii, 8, etc.; Rām. 1375).

To be, become (L.V. 16, 59, etc.; K.Pr. 9, 103, 148; YZ. 47, 149, 463; Śiv. 3, 40, 68, 129, 1639, 1694; Rām. 10, 20, 298, 463, et passim); to happen, turn out, occur (W. 101; L.V. 81, 84, 85, 102; YZ. 22; H. ix, 1; Śiv. 912, 1454, 1843; Rām. 118, 277, 687); to come into existence (L.V. 100, Śiv. 983, Rām. 90).

sōruy samsār gav kuñē trāyē, the whole world became in one condition, i.e. everyone found himself in the same state of prosperity, there was neither rich nor poor (Śiv. 1239); chis kay gathān, vomitings are happening to him, he is vomiting (Gr.M.); sītāyē gav gash, to Sītā fainting happened, she fainted (Rām. 396); kyāh gav, what happened? what is the matter? (YZ. 176, 269); kyāh gōy^u, what happened to you? what is the matter with you? (Rām. 346, 347); sōnas sartal gashēs, for gold base metal will become, gold will be turned into base metal (Rām. 682); shēst^aras sōn gathiy hōsil, thine iron will be turned into gold (L.V. 100).

This verb is commonly used to form nominal compounds, as in ōnta gathun, to go beyond the end, to be at the last extremity; atha g. to get out of hand, be insubordinate; baḍ^aran gathūn^u, increase to take place; bakawās gathun, mutual abuse to occur; bul gathūn^u, a mistake to occur. For these and many others see under the respective nouns. As further examples may be quoted gumān gathun, supposition to occur (to a person), to suppose, conclude (Rām. 463, 1324); khōli gathun, to become void, to miss the mark (of a bullet) (Gr.M.); pōda gathun, to appear, become manifest (Rām. 319, 466, 1063, 1293); to be created, born, produced (Rām. 597); tabāh gathun, to be wrecked (of a ship) (Gr.M.); mē chuna shēkh gathān, I have no suspicion (Gr.M.); gayē bōn ta hyor^u, she was tossed up and down (Gr.M.).

In the second past, gauv or gav is often used as an equivalent of the present tense of the verb substantive, as in khōsh gōs, I became pleased, i.e. I am pleased (Gr.M.); tēr gauv, it is late (Gr.M.), cf. gathēm tēr, I shall be late (Rām. 946); similarly Śiv. 59, 571, 604, 813, 821, 1545, 1660; Rām. 764, etc. In this sense it is frequently employed in definitions (cf. W. 140), as in karzdār gauv suy yus rupayē dārān āsi, a debtor is he who owes money (Gr.M.), similarly Śiv. 1226, 1227, 1553, 1556, 1758. In other connexions it means 'is by nature' (Śiv. 1287), or 'is the same as' (Śiv. 1448, 1449, 1753).

With the conj. part. of another verb, gathun forms a so-called intens. comp., as in mīlith gathun, to be exactly alike (Gr.M.), to become united (L.V. 11, etc.); mashith gathun, to forget (L.V. 59), with dat. of subject, as in yina mashith gathiy, (take care) that you do not forget (Gr.M.), and gen. of thing forgotten (Rām. 871); wuphith g., to fly away (Gr.M.). Similarly, chapith g., to hide oneself (Rām. 398); dazith g., to be burnt up (Rām. 1080, 1082); hēth g. (Hindī lē jānā), to take away (Śiv. 705, Rām. 236, 402, 469, 601); to go with (a person), to take (a person) along with one (Rām. 297, 793); khasith g., to ascend, rise, arise (L.V. 27, Rām. 867, 886, 900, 1761); khēth g. (H. khā jānā), to eat up; karith g., to make and finish (Śiv. 210); marith g., (Hindī mar jānā), to die (Śiv. 706, Rām. 264, 753, 1425, 1577); rūzith g., to be stopped, impeded (Rām. 1092); talith g. (H. calā jānā), to go away (Rām. 336, 1089, 1112, 1379); wuḍith g. (H. uḍ jānā), to fly away (Rām. 260); wasith g., to descend (Rām. 604, 1713, 1718, 1719); wōthith g., to ascend, rise, arise (Rām. 1099, 1741).

h ह. The seventh (or, if we count the aspirate ch as a separate letter, the eighth) consonant of the Kāshmīrī alphabet in the Roman character. It is the thirty-third (or, if we count ts, th, and z, the thirty-sixth) and last consonant in the Śārādā or Nāgarī alphabet, and the thirty-fourth and penultimate consonant in the Perso-Arabic alphabet as adapted to Kāshmīrī. It also represents the Arabic letter ح (the tenth letter in the Perso-Arabic alphabet) when occurring in Arabic words borrowed by Kāshmīrī. It is pronounced as an aspirate, as in India Proper. In schools it is named hāla hō हाँ हौ.

In Kāshmīrī words this character represents an original h, as in hot^a (Skt. hatah), smitten; dāh (Skt. dāhah), burning. It also frequently represents an original sibilant. Thus, it represents ś in words such as ohī, a blessing (Skt. āśih); bēhi, he will sit down (Skt. upariśati); dah, ten (Skt. daśa); hihur, a father-in-law (Skt. śaśura), but hash, a mother-in-law (Skt. śaśrū); hūn^a, a dog (Skt. śun); hīr, a head (Skt. śiraḥ); hat, a hundred (Skt. śata); wuh, twenty (Skt. viṃśati). It represents ṣ in words such as bāha, steam (Skt. cāspa); hār, N. of a month (Skt. āśādha); shēh, six (Skt. ṣaṣ); mahanyuv^a, for manahiv^a, a man (Skt. manuṣaḥ); vēh, poison (Skt. viṣam). It represents s in words such as dōh, a day (Skt. dicasaḥ). It represents both original s and original ś in hyuh^a (i.e. hih^a), like (Skt. sadyaḥ, Pr. śarīṣa with the elision of medial r not uncommon in Dardic languages). If, in the process of declension or conjugation such an h is followed by ū-mātrā or by ē (ya), the sibilant returns under the form of sh. Thus bāh, the twelfth lunar day (Skt. dvādaśī), sg. dat. bōsh^ū; pyuh^a (pih^a), ground to powder (Skt. √piś), f.sg. pish^ū, pl. pishē; hyuh^a, like (see ab.), f.sg. hish^ū, pl. hishē; śōh^a, astringent (? Skt. kaṣāyaka), f. śōsh^ū.

The pronominal suffix kh, representing both the nom. of the pronoun of the 2nd pers. sg. and also any case of the pronoun of the 3rd pers. pl., becomes h when followed by another pronominal suffix. Thus, karān chu-kh, thou makest, karān chu-h-as, thou makest for him; koru-kh, they made him, kor^u-h-am, they made him for me (Gr.Gr. 181).

An initial h is sometimes dropped, as in atha, a hand (Skt. hasta-, Pr. hattha-); asun, to laugh (Skt. √has-).

ha ह interj., i.q. hata 2, q.v., as in ha-biñ = hata-biñ (W. 100); ha-dēd, for hata dēdi (id.); used as an interjection between men, with a or i suffixed to the vocative, as in ha wazīra, O Vizier (H. xii, 19); ha māli, O father (L.V. 107).

hā 1 हा interj. O, ho (L.V. 107; K.Pr. 43, 242, 250, W. 100; Śiv. 189, 1580, 1590, 1739; H. ii, 2, 4; Rām. 1040-1, 1795).

This interj. is generally used in calling a male person at a distance, or in sorrow (K.Pr. 261); with ō is suffixed to the voc. case, as in hā nārānō, ho Nārāyaṇa; hā kākō, O father (nom. kākh)! (Gr.Gr. 97). In Śiv. 1308 ff. hā gōsāñē, O Lord of Yōgis! the ō is not suffixed; so H. ii, 3, etc. In Rām. 1040-1 an inan. m. object is addressed. (Cf. hasa and hata 2.

hā 2 हा interj. alas for (so-and-so) (K. 801).

hai है interj. O, addressed to a woman (K.Pr. 158; Śiv. 850, 941; Rām. 1103, 1106, 1454); a mere exclamation used by women in poetry (Śiv. 1104, 1131, 1358). -hai -hē, exclamation, alas! (Śiv. 87, 323). Cf. hāy 1. -hāy -हाय, id. (Śiv. 536).

hau हौ, hav हव interj. an exclamatory pleon. suff. used in poetry, e.g. in H. ii, 10; an interj. used by a woman in addressing her husband (H. v, 4; xi, 11). (Cf. hay 2.

hē हे, interj. of respect, used by a man to a man, as in hē huzūr, sir; hē nārān, O Nārāyaṇa (L.V. 109; Śiv. 14, 155, et passim; Rām. 50, 51, etc.); the word juv or sō (or sa, Gr.M.) or both are often suffixed to the noun, but juv cannot be used with a word indicating caste. Thus hē nārān juv, hē nārān sō, hē nārān juv sō; hē gana kaul, O Gaṇa Kaul; hē rāma kaul sō, O Rāma Kaul. We cannot say hē gana kaul juv, because kaul is a caste-name. Cf. Gr.Gr. 96 and Gr.M. s.v. Gr.M. gives also forms such as hē sōhib-a, hē sōhib-a-sa, hē sōhib . . . hasa, all meaning 'sir'. In Śiv. 507 (hē bawānī) the interj. is used in addressing a goddess.

huh ऊह dem. that (within sight), this (at some distance, but within sight); both subst. and adj. It may be either an. or inan., and the an. forms are sometimes m., sometimes f., and sometimes e.g. Sing. nom. an. m. huh ऊह; f. hōh ऊह; inan. huh ऊह; dat. an. e.g. humis ऊमिस्; inan. huth ऊथ्; gen. an. e.g. humī-sond ऊमि-सन्दु, or husond ऊसन्दु; inan. humyuk ऊम्युकु; ag. an. m. humī ऊमि; f. humī ऊमि; inan. humī ऊमि; abl. an. e.g. and inan. humī ऊमि, or huwa ऊव; pl. nom. an. and inan. m. hum ऊम्; f. huma ऊम; dat. an. and inan. human ऊमन्; gen. an. and inan. human-hond ऊमन्-हन्दु, or huhond ऊहन्दु; ag. an. and inan. humau ऊमी.

It will be observed that in the pl. there is no distinction between an. and inan., and that gender is only distinguished in the nom.

When used as an adjective, the only inan. form used is the dat. sg. huth, as in huth gāmas, to that village (Gr.M.). In other cases the animate forms only are used, agreeing in gender with the qualified noun, but in this case the f. sg. dat. is humī, not humis. Thus humis hūnis, to that dog (m.), but humī hōñē, to that bitch.

When the adj. pronoun is in agreement with a noun in the gen. case the usual rule for adjectives is followed. When the word qualified is the genitive of a m. sg. an. noun, the pronoun is put in the dat. as in humis hūñī-sond of that dog. If the noun is m. inan. sg., the pron. is put in the abl., as in humī gāmuk, of that village. If the noun is f., either an. or inan., the pron. is put in the f.dat. (see ab.), as in humī hōñē-hond, of that bitch; humī jāyē-hond, of that place. If the noun is plur., m. or f., an. or inan., the pron. is put in the dat. pl., as in human hōñēn-hond, of those dogs; human hōñēn-hond, of those bitches; human gāman-hond, of those villages.

For the dat. sg. and subsequent cases, the various forms of the pron. ath are commonly used for huth, etc. See ath 1.

It will be noted that this pronoun can only be used for things within sight of the speaker, or for things referred to as close by. For things not in sight or not close by, tih must be used.

hams 1 हंस। हंस: m. (sg. gen. hamsun हंसुन् in Śiv. 897, 1516), a swan (L.V. 86; Śiv. 351, 1105); the soul (cf. hams 2). In Hindū mythology the swan is the vehicle of the god Brahmā (Śiv. 160, 801). See hams 2. hamsa-dôr हंस-दोर् or (Śiv. 1177) hamsa-dwâr हंस-द्वार m. 'the soul-door', N. of a holy mountain spur, passed by Hindū pilgrims on the route up the sacred mountain of Haramōkh in Kāshmīr (Śiv. 1052, 1177, 1516, 1607, 1891; Rām. 249). Cf. JRAS., 1910, p. 1337.

hams 2 हंस m. N. of a certain mantra, or mystic formula used by Śaiva Hindūs. It is said to be a representation of the Sanskrit words sō 'ham, written in reversed order as 'ham saḥ, meaning 'I am that', i.e. 'I am one with God', or 'God and I are one'. It is thus used as a name for the sacred syllable ōm, in its character of the anāhata śabda (in Kāshmīrī, anāhath, or anāhata, shēbd) or unobstructed sound, also called the azapā (see anāhata-shēbd and azapā) or unuttered word. It is described as being almost inarticulate, and as being really uttered only by the deity, indwelling in the breast of the worshipper, and therefore to have no human utterer or obstructor of its sound. It is often represented as being equivalent to the Supreme Himself (Śiv. 1011, 1027, 1064, 1687, 1693, 1783). When this mantra is mentioned, by a play of meanings, it is often capable of being translated by 'swan' (hams 1). Cf. hamsa-nād, bel.

hamsa-gad हंस-गद् m. i.q. -nād, bel. (Śiv. 1607). -gath -गथ f. (sg. dat. -gūth^u -गथू), the unobstructed path of this mantra, as explained ab. (L.V. 65). -nād -नाद् m. i.q. hams, ab. Owing to the play on the meaning of hams 1 mentioned ab., this formula is represented as having wings to bear the soul to the Supreme (Śiv. 897, 1516, 1827, 1891). Cf. JRAS., 1910, p. 1337.

hēmsā हंसा। जीवघातः f. slaughter, esp. slaughter of living creatures for food lawful to Kāshmīrī Hindūs; sin (generally) (Śiv. 897). —gathūn —गथू। अतिसोभोन्नवः f.inf. extreme rapacity to occur, of such a kind that it does not stop at robbing the powerless of their property or even the hungry of their food (Rām. 607).

hamēshē हमेश adv. always, ever, continually (El., W. 95). —bahar (P spelling), a medicinal plant used internally as an antiphlogistic (L. 75).

hamsāsan हंसासन m. he whose seat is a swan, N. of the Hindū god Brahmā, whose vehicle was that bird (Śiv. 160, cf. 801). See hams 1.

The original meaning is a reference to a well-known story, told as follows in K.Pr. 77:—

 'a bear formed friendship with a man who was passing through his jungle. For some time he brought his friend large quantities of honey. One day the man fell asleep after eating the honey. While asleep a bee attracted by the sweetness alighted upon his mouth. The friendly bear seeing this thought that he would save the man from the pain of a sting, and so he went and fetched a large piece of rock and aimed it with all his might at the place where the bee was. The stone frightened away the bee, but killed the man' (W. 21, L. 111).

hāpathgī हापथगी। आपदवृत्तिः f. the conduct of a bear (fierce, pugnacious, and savage); (with reference to a human being) conduct like that of a bear.

hāpūṭh हापूठ। आपदी f. of hāpūth, q.v. a she-bear.

har 1 हर m. [in Śiv. 1132, 1617, 1776 (hara-y), the nom. sing. is hara हर m.c.; the voc. hara हर is very common, e.g. Śiv. 127, 161, 287, 313, etc.], N. of the Hindū god Śiva, so called (Śiv. 233) because he is said to be the destroyer (Sanskrit hara) of sin, sorrow, misfortune, and stumbling-blocks (L.V. 78-9, 98; Śiv. 254, 1039, 1061, 1076, 1173, 1181, 1197, 1402). hata 1 हत, see hath.

hata 2 हत, interj. used by a Hindū woman when addressing her husband, when she is alone with him, and she is near by. She does not mention his name, but merely uses the interjection (Gr.Gr. 100); cf. hatōv, bel.

hatā हता interj. hallo!, used in addressing male juniors or inferiors, usually with ā added to the obl. form of the noun, as in hatā gulyā, ho Gul^a (Gr.Gr. 97, W. 100); hatā juwā, hie, Sir (K.Pr. 80).

hatau हतौ interj. used, like hatabā bel. by women, with various suffixes added to the noun. Thus, hatau—au or hatau—a, used when addressing familiars or juniors (male or female), as hatau kākau, O father (kākh); hatau himath kaulau, O Himat Kaul; hatau gana, O Gana. hatau—a bāyau, used when addressing men or women by their proper names only, as hatau mahādēva bāyau, O Mahādēv (Gr.Gr. 99).

hatō हतो interj. used by a man in sorrow or in addressing a person at a distance, ō or au being suffixed to the obl. case of the noun, as in hatō paryō, hallo Por^a (Gr.Gr. 98; W. 100; Śiv. 553, 588; H. x, 5; Rām. 1375).

hata-bā हतबा interj. used (like hatau, ab.) by a woman in addressing a man or woman (W. 100) with various suffixes attached to the noun, as follows: hatabā—bā, used when addressing a man or woman respectfully; especially when addressing a priest, as in hatabā himath-bā, O Himat. hatabā—au, when addressing familiars or juniors (male or female), as hatabā kākau, O father (kākh). hatabā—a, id. as hatabā kāka. hatabā—a bāyē or hatabā—a bayau, used in addressing a man by proper name only, as hatabā mahādēva bāyē or hatabā mahādēva bāyau, O Mahādēva (Gr.Gr. 99). hatabāhē हत-बाहे interj. used by a man in addressing an elderly priest, a person of the middle class, or servant, bā being suffixed to the noun, as in hatabāhē zana-bā, O Zana (Gr.Gr. 97).

hata-biñ हत-बिञ् interj. used when a man addresses a woman (W. 100); möj^a is suffixed if she is older than the speaker, as in hatabiñ pārvath möj^a, O mother Pārvat; biñ is suffixed if she is of moderate age, or of an age equal to that of the speaker, as in hatabiñ Saraswath biñ, O sister Saraswat. It is not used in other cases (Gr.Gr. 98).

hata-dēdi हत-ददि (K.Pr. 80) or -mōj^a -माञ् interj. used by a man when addressing an elder woman, möj^a being suffixed to the noun, as in hatamōj^a pārvath möj^a, O mother Pārvat (Gr.Gr. 98). -sa -स (H. x, 5) or -sō -सा interj. used in addressing equals, male or female (W. 100). -sōhē -साहे interj. used by a man addressing a man respectfully. If the caste of the person addressed is not mentioned, then juv or sō or both must be suffixed to it. Thus, hatasōhē rāma kaul, O Rām Kaul ('Kaul' being the name of a caste); hatasōhē nārān-juv (or nārān-juv-sō), O Nārāyan; hata-sōhē gana-sō, O Gana. Sō may also be added to a caste-name, as in hatasōhē rāma kaul-sō. If bā is suffixed, it indicates that the person addressed is older, and is a priest, a person of the middle class or a servant, as in hatasōhē saha-z-bā, O Sahaz; cf. hatabāhē, ab. (Gr.Gr. 96, 97).

hatōv हतोव् interj. used by women in addressing a man or woman at a distance, au being suffixed to the obl. case of the noun, as in hatōv manasā rāmau, hallo Manasā Rām. It is also used by Musalmān women in addressing their husbands. Thus hatōv kōdirau, O Kādir. Hindū women use hata, ab., and do not mention the husband's name (Gr.Gr. 100).

hatay हतय् (El. hatai) or hatōy हतोय् interj. used by men in addressing female juniors or inferiors, y being suffixed to the obl. case of the noun, as in hatay (or hatōy) washariy, O female child (washür^a) (Gr.Gr. 99) (W. 100, hatāi, hatōi). In H. xii, 16, it is used by a mother addressing her daughter.

hātⁱ हति card. the form which hath, a hundred (q.v.) takes in multiplication as in kāh hātⁱ, eleven times a hundred. It can only be used with numerals above ten. We cannot say tōr hātⁱ, four times a hundred, but must say hath tāk^h, a hundred times four (Gr.Gr. 86).

hōtā होटा interj. of respectful address, O! (L.V. 17).

hōt^u हूत, 1 p.p. of hōsun (f. hōs^u हूच), gone bad, decayed, tainted (Gr.Gr. 212; K.Pr. 12, 177, 247). Cf.

ada-hōt^u, p. 11a, l. 30.

hōṣa-bata हृष-वत । ओदनविशेषः m. boiled rice steeped in water for several days, then strained and fried in oil. It is eaten with spices such as pepper and cloves.

hot^a हटु । आहतः adj. (f. hūṣ^a हृषू), struck; used — as a sec. suff. meaning 'affected by' (Gr.Gr. 136). Thus, āra-hot^a, afflicted by pity, pitiful; bōchi-hot^a, smitten by hunger, starving (YZ. 410); nēnd^a-ri-hot^a, sunk in sleep (L.V. 32; YZ. 47; Śiv. 998, 1661, 1865); guma-hot^a, sweaty; lawā-hot^a, dewy; prayēma-hot^a, overcome by affection (Śiv. 1666); tāpa-hot^a (Śiv. 1813) or tāwā-hot^a, warm, hot; trēshi-hot^a, thirsty (YZ. 406, 411; Śiv. 1585); ṣakhi-hot^a, full of rage (H. vii, 14).

hyuh^a हिहु । उपमः adj. (f. hish^u हिशू), like, closely resembling, exactly like (L.V. 10, 77, 109; K.Pr. 212); (of things compared) all alike, resembling each other (Śiv. 901). The object with which comparison is made is put in the nom. or in the dat. or, occasionally, in the gen. A good example of the use of the genitive is the phrase cyōn^a hyuh^a. Here if we look upon cyōn^a as the nom. of the possessive pron. 'thy', the words mean 'like thine' (so Śiv. 1696); but if we look upon it as the gen. of ṣāh, thou, they mean 'like thee' (so Rām. 810).

Hyuh^a is very commonly used with pron. adjs. of manner, thus,— yuth^a hyuh^a, this kind of (Śiv. 1207); f. yith^u hish^u (Śiv. 1728, Rām. 359); tyuth^a hyuh^a, of that kind (Rām. 1000); kyuth^a h., of what kind? (Śiv. 780, Rām. 1074); similarly kus h., what sort of? (Gr.M.).

As examples of the word governing the nom., we have, e.g. an hyuh^a, like food (Śiv. 1229); ara h., like a saw (Śiv. 1776); gōsōn^a h., like a mendicant devotee (Śiv. 825); lūkan-hond^a (nom. of gen.) h., like (the conduct) of people (Śiv. 1799); pampōsh h., like a lotus (Śiv. 813, 1536); prān h. (value) like (your) life (Śiv. 1547); sūrē h., like the sun (Śiv. 98, 346, 740, 1586); yinsān h., like a man (H. x, 7); yār h. (treat) like a friend (Śiv. 1687).

There is a slight difference in meaning when governing the dat. Thus,— mōl^a (nom.) hyuh^a, (he is) like a father (to him); but mōlis (dat.) hyuh^a, (the son is) like the father (Gr.Gr. 94). Other examples of the use with the dat. are:— (a) with pronouns, ṣē hyuh^a, like thee (Śiv. 472, 1344, 1540; Rām. 933); tas h., like him (Śiv. 35, 997, 1366; Rām. 1116); tath h., like that (thing) (H. xii, 4); kath h., like what? (Śiv. 901).

(b) With nouns subst. cyōnis garas hyuh^a, like thy house (Gr.M.); hūñē h., like a bitch (K.Pr. 7); larē h., like a house (or houses) (Śiv. 1330); lālas h., like a ruby (H. xii, 4); rāzabāyē h., like a queen (or queens) (Śiv. 1237); sīmābas h., like quicksilver (Śiv. 1464); thūlas h., like an egg, oval (Gr.M.).

With words indicating comparative age, hyuh^a indicates the comparison. Thus,— buḍ^a hyuh^a ān'zēn, you must bring whoever among them is old, not 'bring him like an old man' (Gr.Gr. 94); kōsa hyuh^a, the youngest (among a number) (YZ. 418); lōkuṭ^a h., id. (H. xii, 1); zyuth^a h., the elder (of two princes) (H. viii, 5; similarly, Rām. 699, 859).

Hyuh^u, like the Hindi sā, often has simply an intensive force, and in this use sometimes gives an idiomatic meaning to the compound, as in alsēth-hyuh^u, very fat; hence, a fat fool.

Other examples (by no means pretending to be complete) of various idiomatic uses of this word are,— dôd^u hyuh^u, something like a pain, a sort of pain (Gr.M.); kunu-y hyuh^u, exactly alike; shālēn byôl^u chuh hyuh^u, (one) shôl^u seed is exactly like (another), lit. 'for shôlus the seed is exactly similar' (K.Pr. 193, spelt hihūi). hyuh^u samakhun हिहु समखुन् । yēṣṭalam^u m.inf. like (what one wanted) to become visible, just what one desired to be obtained.

Cf. hyuv^u, which is used with the same meaning, and in exactly the same way as hyuh^u.

hayāh हयाह or hayā حيا । gōiravm^u m. shame, sense of shame, modesty; shyness, bashfulness (K.Pr. 29); modest respect shown to an elder, etc., respectful obedience. — gashun — gashun । gōiravānt^u m.inf. modest respect to occur, respect to be shown to the wishes of an elder or the like (whether voluntary or involuntary); discouragement to be felt (Gr.M.). — karun — karun । bhōṭṭuvūṭṭiṭṭhārāṇam^u m.inf. to make respectful obedience, punctiliously and modestly to carry out the wishes of an elder, etc. — vēṣar — vēṣar । gōiravāṇilata^u m. habitual respect shown to the wishes of an elder, etc. — vyot^u — vōt^u । sakkīl^u adj. to plunder; to take, imprison, capture (a person) (Śiv. 1004, 1341; Rām. 361); to buy (L.V. 89, K. 178), also mōiⁱ hyon^u (e.g. K.Pr. 234); to accept (Śiv. 687); to take (good and bad treatment with equal indifference), to bear all things with equanimity; to take (a blow or an insult) lying down, to be poor spirited; to take, receive (a beating, or the like) (K.Pr. 59); to assume, wear (clothes, or the like) (Rām. 345, 1457); to take or assume (a character) (e.g. in a play) (Śiv. 1705); to take (a disease), be attacked (by sickness); to hold, retain, keep (Rām. 56); to adopt (a course of conduct, or of thought) (Śiv. 1754, 1858); to take (as a helper), to take refuge with (Śiv. 1164, 1178); to carry (Śiv. 1149, 1150, 1159, 1211, 1494, 1504, 1665, 1729; Rām. 81, 236, 305, 584, 603, 644, 676, 890, 900, 1394); to carry (news, a message, or the like) (Rām. 560, 800, 832, 928, 1780); to bring, fetch (L. 460, YZ. 242); to carry (a child, etc., in one's arms, etc.) (Śiv. 1357-8, 1381, 1385, 1401, 1542; Rām. 1286; kōchhē, in the bosom, (Śiv. 377, Rām. 1522); to hold, carry (in the hand) (Śiv. 214, 392, 801, 855, 860, 1093, 1400; Rām. 121, 389, 821, 1308); to carry, draw (a sword) (Rām. 648, 903); to carry (a weapon with the object of attack) (Rām. 431, 1096, 1312); to seize (of fire or flames seizing something) (Śiv. 68, 92, 118; Rām. 103, 849, 1014, 1169, 1561, 1578, 1613); to begin (see bel.). hyon^u-dyun^u ह्यनु-दिनु m.inf. to take and give, reciprocal giving and taking (Śiv. 1832; Rām. 1440, 1744).

In the sense of beginning hyon^u is used with the inf. or fut. pass. part. of another verb, which agrees in gender with the object (if any). Thus, suh karun hēwān chuh, he takes the act of doing, i.e. he begins to do; suh chuh khath lēkhun^u hēwān, he takes the letter to be written, i.e. he begins to write it; suh chuh zanāna mārūn^u hēwān, he takes the woman to be beaten, he begins to beat her. In this sense, hyon^u is most often used in the past tenses, and being a transitive verb, then itself agrees with the object (if any) in gender and number, the subject being put in the case of the agent. Thus, parun hyotun, he began to read; tāmⁱ chuh khath lēkhun^u hyot^umot^u, he has begun to write the letter, lit. by him the letter to be written has been taken; tāmⁱ chēh zanāna mārūn^u hēt^umūt^u, he has begun to beat the woman, lit. by him the woman to be beaten has been taken (Gr.Gr. 116). But other tenses also of hyon^u are used in this sense, although not so frequently. Thus:—

Impve. Śiv. 540, 941, 1301, 1770 (all masc.). Fut. (masc.) Śiv. 1190, 1193, 1195, 1202, 1720; Rām. 23, 718, 719, 1773; fem. karūn^u hēn būlⁱ, they will begin to chirp (Śiv. 1721).

The past tenses naturally appear in various forms. Thus:—hyot^u, subject not expressed, Śiv. 1197, 1327; subject in agent case, Śiv. 1118, 1200, 1223, 1300; Rām. 170, 239 (timau wanun^u hyot^u), 709 (Lakshmanan grazun^u hyot^u), 1333, 1636.

With suffixes of agent case, hyotum lāyun nādāh, I began to utter a call (Rām. 1720); hyotum naṣun, I began to dance (L.V. 94); wuchun hyot^umas, I began to look at it (L.V. 48); hyotun, he or she began, YZ. 249; Śiv. 1233, 1707; Rām. 336 (she began), 654 (pariyē hyotun samāna trāwun, the fairy began to cast off her ornaments), 1178, 1755; wanun^u hyot^unas, he or she began to say to him or her (YZ. 249, 389); wanun^u hyot^unakh, he or she began to say to them (YZ. 215, Rām. 270); hyot^unakh prān nērun, their life began to depart (Rām. 1333); hyotukh banāwun, they began to make (Śiv. 960); hyotukh pakun, they began to march (H. x, 1); hyot^uhas wanāwun, they began to sing his praises (Śiv. 960); hētⁱn vih-hihⁱ hāwānⁱ, she began to show airs and graces (Rām. 332); hētikh tāj sārānⁱ, they began to collect the crowns (Rām. 1462).

The suff. is even used when the main verb is intransitive, and when, therefore, it cannot refer to the subject. Its presence here is, in fact, logically indefensible, and is due to false analogy with the construction with transitive verbs. Thus, chētānⁱ hētⁱn kēsh, hairs began to grow white (Śiv. 1704); hēt^unas yin^u nēnd^ur, sleep began to come to him (H. v, 6).

This verb is often used in nominal compounds such as:—and hyon^u, to take the end, go through a thing from beginning to end (Śiv. 120) (conj. part. and hēth, throughout, Śiv. 1206); apoz^u hyon^u nōvⁱ, to take untruth on the voice, to speak untruly (Rām. 1056); awatār h., to take an incarnation, become incarnate (Śiv. 1384); bōr^u h., to take the burden, accept responsibility (Rām. 134); dāg h., to become branded (Rām. 203, 387, 643, 1713, 1718); dōg h., to take a beating, to be drubbed (K.Pr. 59); danda h., to take in compensation (H. v, 11); gam h., to suffer woe, be full of sorrow (Rām. 1655); gāsa h., to carry grass in token of submission, as if

to say 'I am thy cow', Rām. 96; hēs h., to seize the mind, compel attention (Śiv. 25); to captivate the senses (Śiv. 1453); lādan hēñ^a, to accept a favour (Rām. 1439); jān hyon^a, to take life, to kill (Śiv. 130, 680; Rām. 67, 310, 492, 913); khūn h., to kill, to murder (Rām. 814, 837, 1075); khābar hēñ^a, to carry news (Rām. 560); kala hyon^a, to hold the head, to fondle (Rām. 269, 1129); to cut off the head, behead (Śiv. 739); kirāyē h., to take on lease (Gr.M.); mōlⁱ hyon^a, to buy (H. x, 14; K.Pr. 234; YZ. 120, 157, 161, 169, 191, 242, 268); mōsh^{kh} h., to smell (Gr.M., Rām. 617); nāv h., to take a person's name, to utter it with reverence (Rām. 271); pānas h., to take upon oneself, take responsibility for (Rām. 134, 502); prān h., to take life, to kill (Śiv. 1387, Rām. 1238); path h., to take a back seat, be defeated, be overcome (Śiv. 1237, 1246); to refrain from (Śiv. 1843); rukhsath h., to take permission to depart, to take leave (Śiv. 694, 1167; H. xii, 10, 13; Rām. 1180, 1183, 1678); rath h., to take blood, to kill, murder (Rām. 1240); samāgam h., to take a meeting, to meet; hēth samāgam, having met, and also (with double meaning, see hēth 2 and hyot^a 1) a friendly meeting (Śiv. 1848); ṭhāl hēñ^a, to take a leap (Rām. 561, 886); ṭāpⁱ hēñⁱ, to take bites, to bite (H. x, 7, of a snake); wath hēñ^a, to take the road, to go forth (Rām. 680, 1598); yād h., to keep in memory, remember (H. xii, 17); zāg hēñ^a, to wait for, expect (Śiv. 272, 1382); zima hyon^a, to accept responsibility, admit (H. xii, 15); zanm h., to take birth, be born (Śiv. 34); zēvi h., to take upon the tongue, to mention, to name, to mention so-and-so's name (K. 675, 1055); zuv h., to take life, to kill (L.V. 54; Rām. 810, 858).

ज ज ह. The eighth consonant of the Kāshmirī alphabet in the Roman character. It is also the eighth consonant when written in the Śāradā or Nāgarī character, and is the seventh consonant when written in the Perso-Arabic character. It is pronounced, as in India proper, something like an English j, but is rather more dental, i.e. the place of contact between the tongue and the palate is slightly nearer the teeth than is the case in English. In schools, its name is zāy zō ज़ाय ज़ा.

The Sanskrit aspirate jha झ does not exist as a pronounced sound in Kāshmirī. When a Hindī or Sanskrit word containing this letter also occurs in Kāshmirī, the jh झ is, subject to the remarks below, represented by j ज. Thus, the Hindī jhamak झमक, brilliancy, is represented in Kāshmirī by jamak(h) जमख. Sometimes the jh झ is retained in writing. Thus, in El., the word jan, a clang, is written jhan, as in Hindī, but this in no way affects the pronunciation. In the present work j will always be written, and jh never, in transliterating Kāshmirī words, even when an affected purism induces a scribe to write झ in the Śāradā or Nāgarī character. It must, however, be remarked that, so far as the present writer's experience is concerned, he has never come across any instance of the use of this letter, even in the case of borrowed words.

As already remarked, the Kāshmirī j ज is rather more dental than the corresponding English letter. This makes it easy to change it into the dental sonant sibilant z ज़, and the change is very common, although, so far as the present writer has been able to ascertain, subject to no definite rule. Sometimes the two letters are optionally interchangeable, as in the case of the Persian word juz جو, a quire, which, when borrowed by Kāshmirī, takes the form juz^awa जुज्व or juj^awa जुज्व. At other times the use of j ज or z ज़ indicates variant meanings of the same word, as in the case of juv जुव, a suffix of respect, and zuv जुव, life, both of which native authorities connect with the Sanskrit word jīva- जीव-. As a rule, however, in words borrowed from other languages, such as Persian, which possess both j and z, the custom of the original language is followed, as in Persian jārī جاری, running, Kāshmirī jōrī ज़ारी; Persian zabān زبان, language, Kāshmirī zabān ज़बान. There are, nevertheless, exceptions even to this, as in the case of juz^awa or juj^awa above mentioned, or in the case of the Persian ziyāda زیاد; more, which becomes jiyāda ज़्यादा in Kāshmirī. In pure Kāshmirī words the nearest approach to a rule is that when an original j ज is followed by y य it is not changed to z ज़. To Kāshmirī ears every j ज has a y-sound inherent in it, and it follows that many Kāshmirīs, when writing their own language in the Śāradā or Nāgarī character, put no dot under ज़ when it represents z, but, on the contrary, represent the j-sound by jiy ज़्य. Others, again, make no distinction in writing between the two sounds, representing both by ज़. There are thus three systems of writing this pair of sounds, viz. :—

j	ज	ज्य	ज़
z	ज़	ज़	ज़

The third system is that followed in this dictionary; but, as the second system is also in very general use, all important words will also be given with the spelling of that system, with cross-references to the spelling according to the third system. Thus, the word jōrī ज़ारी, running, will be found in its proper place in alphabetical order; but, as the word is often written and pronounced jiyōrī ज़्यारी, that word is also given in its proper place, with a cross-reference to jōrī.

So strongly is the y-sound heard by Kāshmirīs in the letter j ज, that ja ज is usually pronounced jē ज्य, ya य following a consonant being always sounded as ē or yē (see article ē). Thus, the word jangul जंगुल, a forest, is commonly written and pronounced jēngul ज्यंगुल, and the borrowed Arabic word jald جلد is pronounced by some jāld ज़ल्द and by others jēld ज्यल्द. Conversely, an original jiy ज़्य may be represented by j ज or even z ज़. Thus, the Sanskrit jiyōtiṣa- ज्योतिष-, an astronomer, is represented in Kāshmirī by jūtish जूतिष or even zūtish ज़ूतिष, as well as by jiyūtish ज्यूतिष, the former being the usual spelling, although the latter, from a Paṇḍit's point of view, is etymologically more correct.

As has already been said, the Sanskrit or Hindi ja is represented in Kāshmiri by j ज. This j ज, like an original j ज, is also liable to be changed to z ज. Thus, the Sanskrit budhyatē बुध्यते, Prakrit bujjhai बुज्जह, is represented in Kāshmiri by bōzi बोझि, he will hear.

It thus follows that, if a word beginning with jē or jy is not found in this dictionary, it should be looked up under ja or j respectively, and vice versa. Moreover, as j ज and z ज are sometimes interchangeable, if a word is not found under j it should be looked up under z, and vice versa.

jā जा or iyā या जा or (H. ii, 4; x, 12) jāh जाह or (Siv. 203, Rām. 573) iyāh याह f. i.q. jāy, q.v., a place. yēkh iyā यख या जा adv. in one place, together (Siv. 905, H. as ab.); so, ba yēkh jā बयख जा जा id. jāi, see jāy.

jī जी m. (sg. dat. jīyēs जियेस), a suff. of respect, i.q. juv and jīy, q.v. This is the Hindi form of the word, and is probably borrowed from India proper. Cf. brahmā-jī, p. 121a, l. 38. It is sometimes added directly to the noun, as in bābā-jī (Siv. 555), nārād-jī (Siv. 639), shivanāth-jī (Siv. 131), viśhn-jī (Siv. 1357), and sometimes to an obl. form, as in krushna-jī (Siv. 110), narasimha-jī (Siv. 857); shiva-jī (Siv. 516).

क क् क. The ninth consonant of the Kāshmirī alphabet in the Rōman character, the first when written in the Śāradā or the Nāgarī character, and the twenty-eighth when written in the Perso-Arabic character. Its Kāshmirī name is kōv ka कोव क. It is sounded like an English k, but without any trace of the aspiration which is often heard in English when that letter is uttered. It is also used to represent the sound of the Arabic q ق (qāf), which, in Kāshmirī, occurs only in words borrowed directly or indirectly from that language. In such cases the q ق is usually pronounced as k in speaking Kāshmirī. Some writers, however, represent it by kh.

The aspirate of k is kh ख ख, which is the second consonant of the Kāshmirī alphabet when written in the Śāradā or the Nāgarī character. Its Kāshmirī name is khōn¹ kha खनि ख. This aspirate kh is also used to represent the Arabic and Persian kh خ, which occurs only in words borrowed from those languages. In such cases, the kh خ is pronounced as the ordinary aspirated kh in speaking Kāshmirī. Except in a few isolated words, such as hōk^u, sour, when k is followed by ü-mātrā, by y, or by ē, it is changed to c. Thus, batuk^u, a duck, fem. bat^uc^u; √thak-, be weary, 2 p.p. thacyōv; nyuk^u, thin, nicēr, thinness (Gr.Gr. 30; Gr.M., p. 23). Similarly, except in the case of a few isolated words, such as khūkh^u, speaking nasally, kh, when followed by any of these letters, becomes ch. Thus, hōkh^u, dry, fem. hōch^u; √likh-, write, 2 p.p. lichyōv; tryukh^u, clever, trichēr, cleverness (ib.).

kai in kai zag (L. 463), see kēv¹-zag, s.v. kyov^u.

kh 1 ख pron. suff. of the sing. nom. of the second person as in poku-kh, thou wentest; kor^m-akh, thou wast made by me (Gr.Gr. 184). If this suff. is followed by another pron. suff. it becomes h. Thus karān chu-kh, thou makest, karān chu-h-a-s, thou makest for him (Gr.Gr. 181). With this word may be compared the Armenian kho, thy, in which Indo-European tū- has become kh-.

kh 2 ख pron. suff. of any case of the plur. of the third person, as in karān chu-kh, he makes them or he makes for them; koru-kh, he was made by them (Gr.Gr. 186). If this suff. is followed by another pron. suff. it becomes h, as in kor^u-h-a-s, I was made by them (Gr.Gr. 181).

kha ख m. the sky, the firmament; (in Saiva philosophy) kāh 1 काह or kah कह । एकादश card. e.g. (pl. dat. kāhan काहन्, Śiv. 522, L.V. 95), eleven (Gr.Gr. 76); kāh, Rām. 1740; kah, K.Pr. 91, 95, 153; YZ. 82; kahai, only eleven (K.Pr. 97, W. 124). As a rule kah is used in the Musalmān dialect and kāh in the Hindū dialect. —shēth —शथ । एकादश शतम् card.

e.g. eleven hundred. With kāh, hath becomes shēth (Gr.Gr. 84, Rām. 740-1).

kāha-nēth^{ar} काह-नेथ । जातकर्मनामकरणे m.
N. of a certain Hindū birth-ceremony. On the eleventh day after birth (if all goes well) the mother ceases to be impure. The kāh-nēth^{ar} ceremony is then performed. A Brāhman priest is summoned, and the mother drinks the five products of a cow.
The seven birth-room vessels (see hurⁱ-lēj^u, p. 346, l. 41) are filled with food of which relatives and friends partake. A tree is traced in chalk upon the wall, and the family astrologers cast the child's horoscope (see L. 259, kah netar). -nōw^u -नोव । एकादशनामवान् m. he who possesses eleven names; esp. the Hindū God Rudra (a form of Śiva) who appears under eleven forms, each of which again is a Rudra. The usual list of the names of these eleven Rudras is, in Sanskrit, Ajaikapad, Ahirbudhnya, Hara, Nirṛta, Īśvara, Bhuvana, Aṅāraka, Ardha-kētu, Mṛtyu, Sarpa, and Kapālin. -rōth^{ur} -रोथ । दानविशेषद्रव्यम् f. N. of a present sent by a Hindū to his daughter's father-in-law and other relations on the eleventh day after the death of his father or other senior relation. It is on this day that the śrāddha ceremony for the deceased is performed.

kāh 2 काह । आसेचनम् m. watering of fields, whether sown or not, by sprinkling (either from rain, or from reservoirs). Cf. kōbari-kāh, p. 382b,
l. 13.

kāh 3 काह । पकादशी तिथिः f. (sg. dat. kōsh^u काशू), the eleventh day of a lunar fortnight (according to the Hindū almanac) (Gr.Gr. 69; cf. gād, p. 276a,
l. 37).

kāh 4 काह । चर्मतनुः f. a lace made of leather, a strip of leather used as a thread for sewing together the component parts of leather articles (such as shoes, bellows, or the like) (H. xi, 14).

kāha tārañē काह तारन । भस्त्राचर्मोदिसूतिः f. pl. inf.
'to pass the laces over', i.e. to sew leather goods with this leather lace.

kāh¹ कहि

kāh¹ 1 कहि। कयम् adv. how?, in what manner? (poet.) (Śiv. 1624). -tām -ताम्। कयमपि adv. somehow or other (poet.) (K. 1119). -tāmāth -तामथ्। कयमपि adv., id. -tān -तान्। कयंचन adv., id. (K. 366, 740). -tānēth -तानथ्। कयंचन adv., id.

kāh² 2 कहि। केन मूलेन adv. at what price? As in kāh¹ chēh dā-khār, at what price is a khār of paddy? like our 'how much is wheat a bushel?' (K.Pr. 109).

kāhū 1 कह। कपणः adj. e.g. miserly, a miser (obs.).

kāhū 2 कह, m. Lactuca sativa (El.); cf. hand.

-khor^a m. N. of a certain edible fungus, Hydnum coralloides. It grows in rotten wood, and in the burnt-out hollows of Picea Morinda (L. 73 kāho khar).

kēh कैंह। किंचित् pron. indef. used either as a subst. or as an adj.

[It has in the singular two sets of forms, one animate, the other inanimate. In the nominative singular animate it has a set of forms which are confined to the masculine, and of which the distinguishing vowel is u, and another set of forms which are of common gender, and of which the distinguishing vowel is a. In the other cases of the singular it is of common gender.

The inanimate forms of the singular are all of common gender.

In the plural there is no distinction between animate and inanimate, and all forms are of common gender.

The simplest forms of the sg. nom. are kūh (an. m.), kāh (an. c.g.), and kēh (inan. c.g.). To these ts is added as an indefinite suffix, so that we get some such form as kūhts, kāhts, or kēhts respectively, but such forms are now obsolete, although grammarians give a form kēts or kēnts, which is now not used except in the nom. plur. (cf. Gr.Gr. 67, 91). In Rām. 150 there is, however, the form kēhsh-āh, and this is the only instance yet noted of the preservation of the h before the ts.

This form kēhshāh leads us to the second set of nominative forms used at the present day. Under the rule of Kāshmirī phonetics that a final surd must be aspirated, kūhts, kāhts, and kēhts regularly become kūhsh, kāhsh, and kēhsh respectively. These have been contracted to kūsh (L.V. 60), kāsh, and kēsh, to which the suffix āh of the indefinite article is added, so that we finally arrive at the forms kūshāh, kāshāh, and kēshāh, which are now in everyday use, as optional forms of kūh, kāh, and kēh respectively.

The suffix ts is not used in the oblique cases of the singular, which have special forms, but reappears in the plural, where it is used throughout.

For the singular oblique cases, the animate form is kaīsi and the inanimate form is kuni.

For the plural, the nominative is kēh, kēts or kēnts, or kēshāh, and the base of the oblique cases is kēts.

The above remarks primarily refer to the use of this pronoun as a subst. Its use as an adjective is very similar, but is more lax and will be dealt with later on.

The following are therefore the forms occurring in declension:—

Singular, nominative; animate; masculine, kūh (K. 578, 795), kūshāh कूशाह (Gr.M.); common gender, kāh काह (El. kahn) (L.V. 107; Śiv. 79, 81, 85, 214, 423, 985, 997, 1189; Rām. 139, 164, 504, 720, 729, 770, etc.; H. i, 2; vi, 10; xii, 2), kāshāh काशाह (Śiv. 356-7, Rām. 884).

Inanimate, common gender, kēh कैंह (El. kihn) (Śiv. 309, 329, 589, 594, 636, 647, 984, etc.; Rām. 149, 360, 520, 559, etc.; L.V. 9, 11, 19, etc.); kēshāh कैशाह (Śiv. 117, 974, 1529; Rām. 162, 587, 653, 1081) (kēhshāh कैहशाह, Rām. 150). In old Kāshmirī we have also kūh कुह (L.V. 2), and kūsh (L.V. 60).

All oblique cases except gen., an. kaīsi कैसि (Śiv. 1216, 1228, 1460; Rām. 133, 139, 215-6, 543, 1093, 1220, 1230, 1597, 1621, 1780; H. ii, 8; iii, 3; L.V. 35) or kōsi कासि (K.Pr. 171, 208; H. v, 9); inan. kuni कुनि (Śiv. 306, 1281, 1757; Rām. 780).

Gen. an. kaīsi-hond कैसि-हन्दु (Rām. 381, 754, 881, 1228); inan. kunyak कुन्यक (see bel.).

Plural, an. and inan., e.g. nom. kēh कैंह (Śiv. 123; Rām. 778, 861-3, 1071-6, 1379; L.V. 32); kēts कैत्स or kēnts कैन्त्स (Gr.Gr. 67, 91) or kēshāh कैशाह (Gr.M.); dat. kēsan कैसन (Gr.M., K.Pr. 102); gen. kēsan-hond कैसन-हन्दु (Gr.M.); ag., abl. kēsau कैसौ (Gr.M., K.Pr. 102).

It will have been observed that in all the above forms, except kaīsi, the stem vowel is long and is nasalized, thus, ū, ā, ē. In writing in the Nāgarī or Śāradā character the nasalization is often represented by an n before ts, thus, kūnshāh कून्शाह, kānshāh कान्शाह, kēnshāh कैन्शाह, kēnts कैन्त्स, kēnsan कैन्सन, kēnsau कैन्सौ. This perhaps indicates a real variation of pronunciation, but, so far as the present writer's experience goes, there is no true n-sound, but only a nasalization of the vowel except in the nom. pl. kēnts, in which the n is generally distinctly audible. The vowel is also very commonly written and pronounced short throughout, thus, ū, ā, ē. This is particularly common in the Musalmān dialect (e.g. in H.), but also occurs in Hindū poetry, so that we get kūh कुँह (El. kūh) (Śiv. 311; Rām. 715, 1076, 1762; L.V. 2, 35, 60); kūshāh कुँहाह (El. kāh); kāh कँह (El. kāh); kāshāh कँहाह (El. kāh); kēh कँह (El. kēh) (H. i, 6; ii, 5; iv, 4, 6; v, 8; viii, 2; ix, 6; xi, 15; xii, 6, 7, 15); kēshāh कँहाह (H. vii, 26; x, 3; xii, 4, 5, etc.) or even kētsāh कँसाह (H. vii, 20); kēnts कँन्त्स; kētsan कँत्सन; kētsau कँत्सौ.

The final h of kūshāh, kāshāh, kēshāh is also sometimes omitted, so that we get kūshā कुँहा, kāshā कँहा, kēshā कँहा. In the Persian character, moreover, the final āh of these three words is often written ah, so that we get kūshah कुँहि, kāshah कँहि, kēshah कँहि, etc. There are other minor variations of spelling, which it is unnecessary to note here.

When used as an adjective, all the forms given above for the use of this pronoun as a substantive may be employed, number for number, case for case, an. masc. for an. masc., an. c.g. for an. c.g., and inan. for inan. Moreover kūh (kūh), kāh (kāh), kēh (kēh), or kēshāh (kēshāh), etc., may be used without change to agree with any inan. noun in any case of either number. The following examples of adjectival use occur in the literature at present available:—An. m. sg. nom. kūh कुँह (Rām. 373); kūh कुँह (K. 419); kāh कँह (Śiv. 35; Rām. 1425, 1498; H. v, 8).

Inan. sg. nom. kēh कँह (H. v, 10; vi, 16; viii, 1, 2; x, 1, 7; xii, 5); kēh कँह (Śiv. 23, 375, 429, 518, 644, 750, etc.; Rām. 188, 219, 298, 302, 409, 533, etc.); kāh कँह (Śiv. 255, 477, 771, 1757; Rām. 417, 617, 836, 967, 1649); kāh कँह (K.Pr. 201); kāsh कँह (L.V. 41); kēsh कँह (L.V. 59); kēshāh कँहाह (Rām. 300, 699); kētsāh कँसाह (H. xii, 4, 19); kūh कुँह (Rām. 231, 836); and the irregular kūh कुँह (Rām. 689, see bel.). L.V. 77 has an inanimate fem. kōh कँह (in kōh-ti).

Obl. kuni कुनि (K. 949; Rām. 762, 1023, 1037).

Pl. nom. kēh कँह (Rām. 775, 786, 852, 1343). In H. xi, 7, kēh कँह is used as an. fem. pl. nom. The only available example of this form as m. is the irregular kēh कँह of H. vi, 11.]

As subst. an. anyone (Śiv. 77, 81, 85, 214, 423, 985, 997, 1189, 1228; Rām. 133, 139, 215, 381, 504, 720, 770, 884, 915, 1379, etc.; H. i, 2; ii, 8; iii, 3; vi, 10; xii, 22; L.V. 35, 60); someone (Rām. 944, 1179).

As subst. inan. anything (Śiv. 329, 589, 594, 636, 647, 728, 984, 1434, 1451, 1749, 1858; Rām. 149, 360, 520, 559, 758, 1158, 1287, 1342, 1399, 1658, 1661, 1670; H. i, 6; ii, 5; iv, 4, 6; v, 8; viii, 2; ix, 6; xi, 15; xii, 6, 7, 15; K.Pr. 201); something (Śiv. 309, 974; Rām. 786; H. vii, 20, 26; x, 3; xii, 18).

As adj. an. any (Śiv. 35; Rām. 1425, 1498; H. v, 8); some, a certain (H. vi, 11; xi, 7).

As adj. inan. any (Śiv. 23, 255, 375, 429, 477, 644, 750, 763, 771, 777, 843, 844, 873, 1072, 1757; Rām. 188, 219, 298, 302, 409, 471, 617, 654, 817, 836, 1343; H. vi, 16; viii, 1; x, 1, 7; xii, 5, 19); some, a certain (Rām. 300, 599, 786, 1150, 1388, 1743; H. v, 10; viii, 2; xii, 4, 19).

As adv. at all, in any respect (with neg. not at all, in no respect) (Rām. 283, 331, 347, 754).

kūh compounded with an interrogative pronoun becomes still more indefinite, as in kūh kus, anyone whatever (Rām. 715); kūh kyāh, some . . . or other, of some kind or other (adj. inan.) (Rām. 231, 373), so kūh kami sāta, at some time or other (Rām. 836); kēh na-ta kyāh, nothing at all (L.V. 19). In kūh kath jāyē, in any place whatever, the vowel of kūh has been changed (Rām. 689). Cf. kōh-kūti (p. 390b, l. 30).

biyē kūh बिय कँह (m.) biyē kāh बिय कँह (c.g.) (Rām. 729, 1246), etc., anyone else; someone else; someone more; as adj. an., any other. biyē kāh-ti बिय कँह-ति anyone else at all (Rām. 164). biyē kēh बिय कँह, etc., anything else (H. xii, 8); something else, something more (H. iii, 8).

na kūh न कँह (m.) (K. 582), na kāh न कँह (c.g.) (Rām. 139, 1076), etc. (or the na may follow), no one. As adj. an., not any, no. na kēh न कँह, etc., not anything, nothing (L.V. 9, 11, 90). As adj. inan., not any, no (Śiv. 518; Rām. 26, 104, 208, 275-6, 912, 1002, 1270, 1710, 1730; L.V. 41, 77). As adv., not at all (H. ii, 5; v, 5; xii, 2). El. kihnnah. It often takes the form kēh-na कँह-न, with short vowel and no nasal.
